A few very valuable instructions to the crews of stranded vessels, in the use of Captain Mauby's apparatus for saving lives from shipwreck, have been arranged by Commander James Pulling, R.N., of the North Yarmouth District, and are published in the form of a pamphlet. We consider that every publicity should be given to anything that may tend to save the life of poor Jack, and anything that may be use to save the life or poor Jack, and no doubt these instructions will be very interesting to all persons connected with shipping. Very few signals are introduced, with a view of preventing mistakes and confusion. The expense is fixed at so low a price, that we hope all Captains and Merchants of vessels will take care to supply themselves with them; they are in a form to be put on boards and placed in the cabin, or other con-

OPERATIONS AGAINST THE WRE, E UP THE "EDGAR," AT SPITHEAD.
THERE operations are seperintended by Lieut. Barlow, RI. Engineers, acting under the directions of Maj. Gen.

Next morning a namelit of Naval pointeners and other workmen were engaged, giving the preference to those who had been employed in the operations against the Rayal George the year before, after which the Success was sent out to Spithead, and moored to the northward of the wreck of the Rayar, pair near it; whilst Nos. 4 and 5 lighters, or laught, the mass that had been thou employed, were moored over it, and the diving nommenced on Saturday, the 4th, but without shoose. On Monday, 6th May, Corporal Jones, M. Sappers and Miners, sent up an iron Lispounder gifts, covered with an incrustation of mud and pebbles, furmed into a sort of ponglomerate by the earlie of iron, with oysters adhering to it, on removing which the majal was oysters adhering to it, on removing which the metal was an soft, that it sould be indented by the sail, and with out off and soraped small or pounded, it become extramely hot, and did not cool again for some hours when tied up in paper. On 9th, Lauce Corporal Girvan sent up the muzzle part of an 18-pounder, which had been broken; in the context of the tempines and an 18th Consent. two just in front of the trunnions; and, on 10th, Corporations sent up the breech part of enother, to penaler, which the trumions were attached, but these fragmonts belonged to different guns. The above-mentioned Gorporals are now the only experienced divers employed; but three other Military divers beside them work daily the same spot, who are frequently changed, in order to ascertain those who are most likely to be useful. Some of them have been much distressed, for the depth is 134 fathoms at low water, but others are very premising; the nut depending, however, upon physical strength, but upon some peculiarity in the constitution of the individuals, for they are all healthy, active men in the prime of life.

On Monday, 13th May, Maj. Gen.: Pasley paid his first visit to Spithead, and found everything well arranged and well conducted. as Admirst Hyde Parker, the superintendent of the Dockyard, had afforded every nece aid both in fitments, stores, and man, having sent the same skilful and experienced riggers in the lumps, and having ordered out the Druke sailing lighter to Spithage to receive and load the guns recovered, white her master and crew assist in the work. Including the veteran persioners, the total number of soldiers, sailors, &c., oupleyed daily is more than 100; but the sperations will not be so interesting as those of the Royal George, &c. great charges of gunpowder being required, and no large masses of timber remaining.

The Edger was blown up in 1711 by some accide that could never be accounted for, as every soul on boars. including numerous visitors from the above, in addition to 400 seamen and merines, perialed. The explosion a her magazines having knocked her to pieces before a park, the tide domest from the control of the control o sank, the tide flowed freely round the parts, so that most of her wood-work has been esten by the worms; but of her wood-work has been eaten by the worms; making unlike the timber of the Royal George, which was pristered in the stiff bise mud, the little that newtremells. It the woodwork of the Edger is entirely rotten, and may be broken to pieces by the hand, or penetrated with rate by eay sharp instrument. In fact it has the appearance of being charred through, and the first hasty impressed was that it might have been harned, but the no consider of being charred through, and the first hasty impression was that it might here been barned, but this on coupling ration was impossible, because though part of it may high been set on fire and thrown up into the sir, the fire wailing have floated away on falling, and the oak would have pend that immediately, long bufore the fire could have pend trated deeper than the surface. Excepting that all this grain of the wood is perfect, it is quite black throughout like peat. Last year pest of the keel and a floor timbed of the Repar were bringht up in good preservation; but this year the only cound place was only through which in ten bott had been driven, which was treatf reduced in aligh to less than a teach pair of the former thickniss. but to less than a truth pair of its former thickens, hell which, as it oxidated, had preserved the parts of the week' near and round it, but the remainder of the same place. was as post as post. The prospect of reserving all this guess of the Edger in a very short time by up meaning all this guess of the Edger in a very short time be by up meaning as premising as George? Pasley and the mein suspicional maker him had antisipated at the end of lists passens. In 1840 no lass than 15 intiggests were received in a few days, and towards the past which was broken, and on they mere hill at or near the entire was broken, and on they mere hill at or near the surface of the entirering ground, so that no charges of guapowder was required to clear any of them, it was natural to canclasis that the right of them would be found with equal team. The inconstance and sequelous variety of the French character has not seemed the keen mindle eye of Louis Philippe, and he evidently looks forward to a storing future when death must deprive the younger branch of the Bourbons of his adult guidance, and appea it to revolution and dethroughent, or the scarcely less terrible alternative of a war with Great Britain. He has prepared against the first danger by sucircling Paris with a chain of forts, "conceniently bidepted for domestic purposes," an George Rebins would advertice if he had the sale of them, and in the great of a foreign wise, an enemy wor soon discover that the Brench King has left nothing chance. The English Navy liet is crammed with the mances of small frigates, aloops, and brigs, and yet we go on building more vessels of the same class, as if such things as quick sailing, powerfully armed itilies, did not exact in the navies of other powers. There is nothing appen the water like theight will-managed fifty, dashing through the rich argonics and callacts of the enemy.

It is evident by the foregoing attacksents that the French flivernment is well asher by the invertunce of keeping up and imposing force of firstline brigates; and whilst steadily forming a powerful steam Navy, it takes eare to have a number of sixties sund fitties in an advanced state of construction. It grew out of a discussion on the Tariff Bill, in committee of the whole, and was the only business done. Mr. Wright, of Indians, had the floor first this morning, and defended the Bill. Ms. Kennada, of Indiana remarked that the hour, Ms. Kennedy, of Indiana, remarked that the charges were all true. Mr. White rejoined that he had refuted them as far as his time paymitted. Mr. Rathbun (Democrat), of New York, said the charges were true, and would be proved. White, being thus contradicted, and would be proved. I am sorry to have been misconderstood as at all personal (apacking of that Sime) to Mr. Hall. No Officer sonal (apsaking of that time) to Mr. Hall. No Officer can possibly have a higher opinion of Captain Hall's talents and services than myself. Had no been spiken of out of place, I should not have had occasion to reasond to the sall. I maintain my appointment was senior to the official appointment that gallent Officer had for his authority at that time, said I had no idea before that my right was questioned. Sir Mdward Beicher states in his work, the seamen were nonmanded by Mr. Goss. As to the soldiers, they were undoubtedly commanded by Lieut; Grant—as I stated before—my able co-operator throughthe sources, they were and outself commanded by Libri; Grant—as I stated before—my able co-operator throughout; and I perticularly stated the Officers "he" had with him. That, however, does not prove I was not the senior Officer on the ground; and as for commanding my "own men," Commander Monypenny is the Officer from whom I received orders to land in command of the seamen, as I received orders to land in command of the seamen, as there was not a Lieutesant available. Had one arrived on the graund, or any Officer senior to myssif, my duty would have been to have put myself under his orders. It is not the rule of the service for each Officer to take his perty his own route; there cannot be but one senior and Commanding Officer, though some of us may be too sesious to be eurisid.—I have, &c., Exctor, May 13. THE NEW INFANTRY CAP—BY SOME SO CALLED.

To the Editor of the Royal she Military Ganette.

Sia,—These things, which by some are called caps, hy others hat, by others fire-buckets, and by others, I know not what, have arrived at my regiment, to disfigure

Now not wass, have arrived at my argument to the easiing two years.

Now, it seems quite difficult to adopt a suitable name for this article that has been invented to supersede my good old chaso, for it cannot properly be called a cap, nor it cannot be turned a but. We can call it nather the one of the inthan many than we are call a male a bored or an nor the other, more than we can call a male a borse or an ass, which we are aware is neither, the enimal being of a nature between both—a little of the one, much of the other,—but neither entire. So stands this new invention, between the het and cap.

Some trouble and alteration certainly might still entitle it to the prime of hat. For instance, let it be directed of it to the name of hat. For instance, let it be diverted of its ball, its bronze ornaments, and its peaks, adding in the place of the latter, a brim to go all read it, and it would become a hat—though an ugly one—at once, and less trouble might convert 't into what we Millitary man call a cap. This might be effected by morely stripping from it the pale of the neck peak, leaving the one in frant,—the mat abovel, as it now stands; so would it become a prodigious ugly cap, though, in which mate, I would even profess it to its present one.

BARRACK ALLUWANCES TO GROVERLY ECOM CLERKS.
To the Educe of the house and Milliony Occasion.

Six,—A letter leaving very recordly been addressed by the Becottery to the Beard of Ordinance to the various Berrest Masters in the United Kingdom, stating that the Beard have, in consequentiation with the Quarter-Master General, directed that a weekly issue of feel, hitherte granted to the Naniperminishmed Staff of corpe, is in future to be restricted to the Regimental Serjeant-Majors and Quarter-Master Regimental Serjeant-Majors and Quarter-Master Regiments of Infantry, I take leave to call your attention to the subject, being fully aware of your wich to see justice done to all ranks.

I am one of the vices who will suffer by this regulation, if enforced. I have now for some years been Orderly-Room Clerk to a regiment of Cavalry, and as such have hitherto received un allierance of 130ths, of ceal in the winter, and 70ths, in the summer months. I have been allowed a room to myself, and, being a meeried man, have nearly been compelled to purchase about one hundred weight of cools, costing on the average, about 1s. 6d., in addition to the allowance. My appenses will now be increased, and as I receive no remuneration from the Adjurance, and as I receive no remuneration from the Adjurance, or any other parson, beyond my net nev. I am thus oregated, and as I receive to remuneration from the Adjuerganed, and as I receive no remuteration from the Adju-fant, or any other person, beyond my net pay. I am thus placed on a worse footing than any other Rerjeant in the regiment, who, if starried, and living in a barrack-room, can have his meals cooked at the fire, which is generally kept burning throughout the day.

I do not think I am a solitary instance of men thus situated, and I trust that by bringing my case, and that of others, to the motice of the Master-General of the Board of Ordnanes, he will be pleased to re-consider his measure, and not press too heavily upon a class of men who, I hope, as a body, are not undeserving of some indulgence; and the mure so, when, as in this instance, the saving can be of no material importance to the public, but is a serious inconvenience to poor men. I am, Sir, May 9.

Do THE RANK OF ESQUIER.

To the Editor of the Navet and Military Gasette.

Rin,—I beg to stake a few remarks on the letter of a gentleman signing bimself A Real Esquire. He is quite right in stating that during the late war many men obtained Subalterap. Commissions in the Militia, who were not entitled to hold them from their previous post-tion in society; in fact, he might have added that many companies were bestowed in the same way; but he should also recollect that it was the same in the Army; for I know many men (and some of them distinguished Officers), enced their career in life as apprentices to linen-drapers, grocers, &c., &c., and who purchased into the Army with the money intended to stock their shops, or else got in with vany little interest. I do not mention this as daragatory to them or the Service far from it; but merely to remind your correspondent that during a long and bloody war we must not be particular about the previous evenpation or high family of a Military

But it is very different with the Militia now, as the Lord Lieutenants are very strict about the landed qualification requisite for a commission in this force, and there are blemen (I speak of the rounger some of many young mobleman (I speak of the Younger sone of Peers of course), who are merely Subalterns, through the companies being filled up by the landed gentry of the counties; indeed, no Lieutenancy or Rusigney is now given unless a man has 2001, per annum in freshold or lessehold property (although I allow the qualification by less is less, an with Mombers of Parliament, &c.), and evan in the Ruyal-Louiden and the two Tower Healet Regiments, where the "mailification is reducible by less the amount. many young m the Rayal Louista and the two Tower Hemlet Regiments, where we presidenties is requisite by law, the commissions are their approperty to hold them. All this would he been if an annual list were published by the authorities. But for all this I do not think he would find a ready to serve without pay; for surely the labourar is morthly of his hire; and as it is, the Field-Officers and Transland laws to helf-pay, and the Subsiteras merely that Mittains of 45t, per annuar, were they to be ambudied to the means of the annual. for 20 years - I am, &c. To the Milter of the Nearl and Miltery dispute.

Birs. The Staff Serjeents are, as in well, known, assected for the directions which they fill, as being more whose chereter is not only as good, but whose shoulders and ablition are considerably above those of athers in the regiment—in fact, this is the chief requisits for the fulfilment of their various and energes offices, but how are they paid? sho they not receive a semesthing more than the Platoon Seriems, who, he is very frequently the case. they paid? do they not receive a semulting more than the Platoon Serjeme, who, as is very frequently the case, cannot make out even his Guard Report? My manuer, as merry to may, is in the negative. And area here the cause of complaint does not end; for sithough the Platoon Serjeant alluded to above may, in a year, or even less, obtain the colours of a company, and thus become the recipient of en additional le., attill, the Staff Serjeant, because he is above the ignorance of others, and useful as because he is above the ignorance of ethers, and useful as an accountant or serioser in the ragiment, must remain in statu yes. I admit, Government has made a provision by which, after ten meer' service in little employ, they are to obtain singance additional; but I would ask; is not the prospect too distant? and, as few men rarely obtain the situation before 10 years' service, so very few are fortunate to reap any advantage from this boom, as, at the expiration of 10 years more, should their livins be sparely, would they not be more analously inclining forward for a discharge from the Shavies I discharge from the Service !

id therefore auggest that the Authorities take the case of those men, so justly worthy their sympathy, into their kind consideration; and if not on appointment, that, at the farthest, they may receive the 6d after 3, or even 5 years, instead of 10.—I am, &c. Bugusum. Bogutum.

CHANNEL HARBOUR OF REFUGE To the Editor of the Naval and Milliary Gunette.

Sin, Having seen in your valuable Paper that a com-ission is appointed to consider the place most suitable for harbours of refuge in the Channel, I beg to state that of all the men I know alive at present, Kice-Admiral Sir E. Owen is most and best acquainted with the localities from Beachy Head to the Downs, including the French coast and intermediate shears, the Yarne and Eidge, &c. As far as my own experience goes, Beachy Head is the place best qualified to meet the required object in the event of a war; and since the invention of steam, (but, Sir, I am only an old Lieutenent, which is too humble a rank to have an opinion worth an old broam to those in power, whether Whig or Tory,) I have rode out heavy gales of wind in Scaford Roads, Dungsmes, Dover, Walmer Roads, and the Downs, during the time I served as Lieu-tenant in that much abused and greatly libelled space of vencels—a 10-gun brig, and better readsters and sea-Boars never awam; when they were well hendled, and by those that biero how to handle them. I do not recollect, bythe-bye, that a single 10-gun lerge foundered during the war. Would I could say as much for the others. I re-member that Sir E. Owen in a fright atruck heavily in our gale; if not more, in Dungonous Roads 1 and I chick over gaie, it est more, in Dungeness Boads 1 and I think there is always a heavy sea an, when the wind her, being any time from the S.W.; there is also much shoul, when he to the Varne and Bidge aboats, I have drifted over their in as little in the fathouse water, which I believe is the lowest found they fathouse water, which I believe is the lowest found at applies they are two for out; their formalism is mostly chall, and a precious as at there is come than the little of the start of the star they are two far eat; their farmation is mostly shall, and a precious one there is over these in blowing weather. The reasons on which we found this opinion are strong and many, but the present is not the time to give them; suffice is at any, that the same sources of good information which is under the means of exclusively pointing out to our reading the policy adopted towards Soinde, nearly a year before it was developed, we still possess; and we advisedly state that already measures are in progress towards our complite control over the affairs of the Panjab, and that, most probably, the bad faith of the Seike will once more mill both British venguance, and that conquest will add the Panjab to the British Empire in the East.

In such a state of affiliately was just cause for deep In such a state of afficiently was just cause for deep regret that Lord Ellenborough should have been recalled. That his piace has been well supplied few will deay, but we confess that we would have preferred to see Lord Ellenborough left to complete the able measures for the restoration of our damaged rule, which he so skillfully planned and so energetically measured. The duties left to, Sir Henry Hardings are difficult in themselves, and randered still more so, as being the final arrangements of a grand scheme of polley begins and carried on by Lord Ellenborough, and now saddenly checked by his sudden recall. In this orisis of Links we heartily satisfact that a Ellenberengh, and now endernly checked by his sudden recall. In this orisis of India we heartly rejoice that a Military Governor-General has been nominated, for very few civilians are to be from like Lord Ellenbershift who have a genith for war and like tother great qualifications of a Statesman in contribution with it, all which are essentials for a Gererner-Gineral of India.

It will require all the shifty of Sir Henry Hardings to restore confidence in all shifty in India that his measures rectore confidence in all alongs in India that his measures are those of the double Gorganment he has to serve. THE Gamesic of last appoint contains the appointment of Sir Thomas Fromuntie to the office; of Secretary at War in place of Sir Hinry Hardings the new Governor-General of India.

MAN in his civilised state is a positive paradox; acrate in discriminating right from wrong, a pill at times per-tinaciously pursues that which the knows to be but problematical at best, if not positively detrimental. Fully aware that the grand principle of governing the multitude is based upon the distribution of rewards, and the Infliction of punishment, those in authority too often discard the practice of the first, and substitute in its stead chilling neglect. Hence merit, which no one denies, is suffered to pine in obscurity, unless the individuald be free from the trammels of subjection, either through rank, station in life, or genius. He who is desendent on self slope, is free to excet the best of his talent, and make his was in the world; whilst be who is subservient, is altogether at the express of those who, more prompt to punish than quiek, to reward, not only profit by bla energies, but are rigid in their exaction. Such is the difference of position between the soldier and the civillan, the bondsman and the free; yet both are awayed by the very same influence in their varied pursuits-ing tolls the merchant? why the statemen? the gownemen why! Ambition is the exciting pours - each is unfettered and each aspires to renown, either as the millioneire, the ambition was contared, and the empetitors not Field-Marshels alone, but included the vertext Drammer! Morit was, in the Army of Frence, dely appreciated, and met ite reward. Ambilioù prompte even the plough-hop to compete for the prize awarded for skill in turning a ferrow. Our rustle games, too, have their poppisitay, or prime, for superior ediratiness; and these are responsive to the brush of the for hunter. How great the contention who shall beer off either in triumph! Does not the game of war, and the field of deadly strife, afferd an acous. for ambitions contraction equally, worthy some lessimonial of triemphal ambievaments . Would not a memonto of chiralry college the ardour of rivale? or are British coldiers and sailors so totally imilite British pessents and nobles, that they are callous to marks of distinction? The soldier and sallor would be as proud of the badge of Military merit, as the Chief who led them to victory, and who clone is thus honoured in the British Service

But medels cost money; and we are a nation of shopkeepers, whose creed is pounds, shillings and pence; and a people, moreover, who affect to despise such haubles as stars, ribands, and medals, or the distinction of titles; and yet, in paradonical keeping, how eager does the civic Chief of a corporate town grasp at the honour of knighthood, in return for some complimentary eddress to Majesty, or other equally chivalrous feat! And who this ennobled knight-errent? Sir Naphtha Brilliant, wax and tailow-obandler, who has successfully pursued the golden. call, the poppinjay of commerce, through the fields of greace! or mayhap, Sir Muscovado Lollipop, the great sagar-baker, who his manfally stood the fleres best of his own oven ! It met this a hurlesque upon the dignity of spars? The origin of heraldic honours was talent and the sword; these are now supplanted by treacle and tallow; whilst those born under a gun, nurtured in the camp or the cookpit, and whose life is a constant exposure to esther and war, may, when disabled from service, hobblethrough our streets supported by a crutch, which may equally designate a mouthlest vagaboad, maimed in a broil, or the gallent son of Mars, crippled in his country's cause. Where the budge to mark the distinction? It would be "too expensive" to a people who, when the national dominions have been extended by the Military prowess of the Army and Navy, and new marts thus opened for the vent of the productions of British looms when rich freights of English merchandise have been raccessfully excerted through hostile fleets of superior force by British ters, have their stagment blood for a moment roused. The trump of Parliament announces the netion's thanks; the notes are taken up by the breeth of Zephyr, and as quiskly walted into oblivion, ominously typified at the close of day by the resplendent light, which having its origin in "gas," is destined to and in "smoke !" - Vapour, vapour alone is the veteran's award! But the sulogies ! the eloquent imagery of fanciful nothings, from the lips of fessting orators, expressive of patriotic admiration of men "whom they are proud to call countremen. instead of the more modest admiration of men whom it was pride to be countrymen ofis this nothing? Let but the efferrescence of cha meret. and the dustries disquence from Bargands, have time to encaps from dischargase of the factive discollers, and the dull arithmeths of counting house calculation tots up the cont to which the nation would be put, if wooden legs were and Commander-in-Chief, as in the case of the Marquess of Hastings. There was every reason to hope and believe that some measure would emanate from the Duke himself, and that it would thereby bear all the grace of a spontaneous act. The men tactively user all the grace of a spontaneous age. The men who had been told that "he should never cease to feel the warmest interest in their welfers and honour, and that he should always be happy to be of simples to those to whose gallantry, discipline, and honder, differ couldby was use gallantry, discipitus, much indebted," he gallantry, diedplind, and honder, fifth southtry was no much indebted," had surely some reason to hope that, when the power was possessed, the will would not be wanting to serve them. Since I had the pleasure of eddrawing yest last,
I have received, by the mill vid Marseilles, another latter with necessary of the resent cases of relapsed Museulmans, into which my relative enters with much more interest than la could have possibly imagined; but I suppose that may have arisen from his constant intercourse with the Turks, in his profession or calling of interpreter; by which he has imbibed, in a cartain degree, some of their projudiess. has imbibed, in a certain degrae, some of their projections. He seems to regret, in this instance, the leaves to regret, in this instance, the laterference of the French and British ambassadors, because, as he remarks, it is a decided attack on the rights of the Turkish people, who may "do what they like with their own."

There is a good deal of this part of reasoning, and many details which at present, I think, would be tedlous and out of place. After diseaseing this effeir, my brother returns to the subject of the two Cadia, who were supposed to have offered as great a pustle to the fishes of the Helicepont, as the reel in a bottle does to grown children in England. When the Effendi secretary had made his report that these mutinous lights secretary had made his report that these mutinous lights had been extinguished, he expected to see full satisfaction in the countenesses of his chief; but no such thing. He found him pacing up and down, muttering broken sendences—"Shameful! too bud! had they come on and attacked me foldly, as an chi heldier, I would have met them fairly—but so! they begins by buttering me with compliments, and then three with in my teeth!!" This was certainly some appeling of comfort, that received support by the reflection that he was that day to disc with the surporation or stelety of Greek pilots of the Bosphorus and Dardanellas. As the streets of the septial are toppossible for certages in many pieces, the Borakiac mounted his legan to keep this appointment, attained only by a Capidgi bashs; as soon as he arrived at the Kassim Pasha in the developed, dissier was served; the Simultier indulged diry dealy is all the variety of Positi wines that were pitable before him, and stipped very much the long vaning of the pilots. Wx have seen an article in the "Guerney Stor," in which we are accused of the stating the reasons that caused the dispute with Control W. The Editor says that this is entirely a mission view of the case; that it arose from the supposition that the Lieutenant-Guyernor had made infractions in the looping and general law—alluding, probably, to the relation of the middler—and that so far from His Excolency having envisayonred is instructive any reforms into the appear, he had sharp expressed his satisfaction with it as trational; saying, he admired it as partiarchal, and though at partiage with theoretical principles, it worlds well. the Gallant Officer might depend upon it, that allowing the option to the Captains to retire in the way he proposed, would not effect the remedy of vicering the list. If the Home adopted the recommendation of the Gallant Officer, they would very soon be applied to by home other Callant Member with strong recommendations in favour of the Marine Service, and by some other Gallant Member with strong recommendations in favour of the Marine Service, and by some other Gallant Member with reference to Artillery Officers, and eo on. Capt. Sangagary remarked, that whenever any effort was finded to vindicate the claims of the Navy, the Home was called upon by Government to leave the matter in the hands of the exicustive; whereas, with reference to other departments, the Government exhibited no men reloctance to give the House a voice in the matter. The Right Hom. Baronts taid be could see in a drantage to the House, from making the proposed Retired Liet; but title was a view of the case in which the whole profession, he halpful easy, differed from the Right Hom. Baronet. The present system was in the highest degree calculated to impair the efficiency of our Yavy. Men. who had acquired a thorough knowledge of their profession were set aside—shelved for twenty years vanuage to the Service, from making the proposed Retired List, but title was a view of the case in which the whole profession, he issight say, differed from the Right Hon. Baronet. The present system was in the highest degree calculated to impair the efficiency of our javy. Men, who had acquired a thorough knowledge of our javy. Men, who had acquired a thorough knowledge of their profession were set saide—shelved for twenty years bugsther—their experience readered perfectly useless—their segment—their scaperience readered perfectly useless—their segment of the himself, made a Captain just before the close of the war, lad, in the thirty years and six months; though from various dirounstances he had possessed influence superior to that of very many Officers of equal or even older standing. On all occasions the Navy was boasted of as the great bulwark of the country, yet, on all occasions, when it was sought to do some justice to the men who composed that Navy, they were made an exception to the advantages which were given to the public services (hear.) A Retirement Liet had been accorded to the Marines, on the motion of an honourable relative of his, but now in the House, in egite of powersment; and he did not see why a corresponding concession should not be given in favour of the Navy (hear). The rightchon. Baronet very justly spoke of the prospect of obtaining a flig-slig, as being the darling object of all men who entered the Service; but what chance had he (Capt. Berkeley), after his many years of service, of obtaining that darling object, notwithstanding all the advantages he had powered to performing the darling object, on the same of equal seasons. The commission referred tr., Having his darling the had perhaps, rendered him incapable of performing the edition of the same are accepted when the commission referred tr., Having his darling the had performed with prover and party, and who were shelp imbounded the work in improve the condition and effective was a performed and the first opening of the propositi period of our filtery. He extrainty and manner outer a suggestion to the Commission to remove ame Officers from the list — (cheers)—but the opinion of the Commission was, that it should be left in the hands of the Government, and of course his side of press it. As to the sails of commissions, he confessed he did not see any inconvenience that would be likely to arise from it—that was, in manchy giving to the Roard of Admiralt, the power of putting down certain commissions for sale—because the Officer who got his promotion for service would see that the power of putting down certain commissions for he promotion, lie had himself brought this part of the subject before the Lord lingh Admiral, and also before the Commission; but his views were not adopted, although he had carried some points in the Commission against the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Cuptain Perent, supported the motion. The right hon, and gallant Gentleman opposite had just afforded another example of what appeared to be a too general fact, that men, when they came into office, abandoned the principles which they had advocated in former years. The manner in, which the right hon, cated in former years. The manner in, which the right hon, cated in former years. The manner in, which the right hon cated in former years. The manner in, which the right hon elections holy of men (hear). There were two ships, the Queen at Maita, and the Furlying in the Shannon; they were both built on novel principles, and yot they were not placed in circumstances where their napabilities might be tasked, or the shill of their Officers exercised (hear, hear). Ho was of boulous that an opportunity ought to be afforded by the Gavergment of making the list such as it ought to be, and thus grieng satisfaction to the Navy, and conferring as important advantage on the Service. Ho believed that Lord Haddington was well disposed to exercise the patronage of the Navy, but the only way in which to give satisfaction, was to follow the example of the Duke of Clarence when he was Lord out a case for inquiry, and he should, therefore, vote for the motion.

—Mr. Hungs considered that an isquiry into the subject of the Hon, and gallant Admiral's motion would be of great advantage to the public interests.

Mr. S. Hunners said the question was whether, with a view to reneaty an evil, the saistenes of which was admirad by gil, the proposed addition of about 35, seel, a year to the public bustness would be accompanied by the advantage of a corresponding relief to the List to which it was proposed to be applied; but there being great differences, of opinion on the subject, the question hering a very large one, and the proposed of thegril being remedied by the proposed plan being, in his cubinon, nearly hopeless, he thought it would be wrong to put the country to a fruitiess expense, an aspense which he should not gradge to see doubled if it were likely to produce the beneficial affect, but which would leave us after a few years in the same position as we had been before.

Captain Carrents said he could not support so wild and inconsiderate a solution as this. Looking at the state of the Nay, he saw no such addicting prospect us for render as inmodiate and violent remedy faultspanable; while, at the same benefits intended.

A Tour in Ireland, with Meditations and Reflections. By James Johnson, M.D. 1'Vol.

Ir is much to be hoped that the excellent, but rare example, here set by Dr. James Johnson, of, for the nones, "throwing physic to the dogs," and writing on a acceptoressional subject, will be extensively follower by other of our sminent physicians; for to be such now-days of our sminent physicians; for to be such now-days requires above all other things a quick and shrewd faculty of observation, a wide knowledge of human nature, and a "learned spirit of human dealing;"—and what admirable qualifications are these, for authorable on almost any topic, and above all others on those general topics presented to the traveller.

It is long since we have met with a work so full of the results of the above-named qualities, as this "Tour in Ireland,"—s whime so favourably marked by a union of those two chief sejentials of a book of Travels —samusement and information, its character is that of unfailing vivacity and good humour, amployed in making acceptable to the reader a larger amount of novel remark on general topics connected with Ireland, than it would be easy to point out within the same space in any recent work of a similar kind. In fact, Dr. J. Johnson is that fore avis among recent writers and especially emong travelling writers—an original thinker—an observer with his own eyes instead of other people's, and a frank and feufless expounder of what he observes. The consequence is, that his "Tour in Ireland" is the most racy, original, and entertaining account of the chief "lions" of that country, of any that we have had of late years. It has, moreover, the additional merit of referring to what will becenter be deemed the most remarkable, interesting, and characteristic period of Irish bistory-namely, the most sgitared and sgitating moment of the recent Repeal agitation.

This book, too, is as original in form as it is in matter

It has all the appearance of being neither more nor less than a collection of bond fide extracts from the writer's note book, made at the moment and on the spot to which they refer respectively; made, too, in a total and most wise absence of the lear of critics before the writer's eyes, and consequently possessing a force, a reality, and a ractuess which the most elaborate after-polish never improves, and almost always impairs and defaces,

The book is one that we can cordially recommend to every class of readers, and especially to those who desire to hear the truth about Ireland, and to hear it teld in that plain and simple language which graces it better than all the arts of rhetoric and all the skill of the hookmaker.

The Wilfulness of Woman. By the Authoress of "The littory of a Flirt," "The Managuvring Mother," &c. The atrongest testimony that we can offer, as regards the general merit of those volumes, is to say that we have read every page of them, from the first to the last. Their moral also is excellent; though we cannot help suspecting that the writer is too severs in her setirs of the view of feshionable life. Not two savers, indeed, if such vices as the portrays in reality exhip; her we can-not reconcile ourselves to the nutlon, is belief, that young married women of rank and fashion are never young married women of rank and fashion are sever without renge-pots in their reticules—that they are in the habit of quading tumblers—full of sherry before dis-ner—that they dy to brandy and landstuces, at night, to drown their carse. We would sather not believe in the existence of such attorities. It is a triff sensel, but rostive, that women are always most severe upon the ab intions of the sext. There is one lady writer in patti-cular-we "mane no names"—a woman of high talent cular-we "mane no names"—a woman or mgn unent and character-who, not sontent with daying her victima alive, removaterely applies the scalpel to their yet qui-vering flesh, and laye bare the very anatolog. We doubt the ntility of the process. Be it ours to regard withan as little less than sagel, only.

For himse neters's dely food."

We would rather see woman exhibited as a pattern of excellence than as a picture of deformity. To woman without a beart is a non-existent moneter. In the volumes before us, many of the character cleverly thrown upon the conver; but they do not elways act consistently with themselves. Edward Monteith is act coveletently with themselves. Edward Monteith is constantly spoken of, we hardly know why, so a methodist. If to be kind and just, generous, benevolent, and picus, without perade, he methodistical, it would be wall for us all to be methodists. Yet Monteith, blest with one of the sweetest, best, and truest-hearted of wives, anfers that wife, whom a breath might have awayed, whom a silken thread might have subdained, to rush into the very vortex of fashionable vice said dissipation. The lady ultimetely escapes the many toils with which her path was beset; but, certainly, without any thanks due to her hasband for her salvation. On the other hand, Monteith's bruther, the "dismail General," who has married a woman of high birth and fashion, young enough to be his daughof high birth and feshion, young enough to be his daughter, leaves her wholly to herself, and unattended, upon the abourd principle that a women's self-respect is all-auflicient for her protection, to whatesever temptation she may be exposed. "She will not dare," quoth he, "to do drong." But she dees do wrong; the falls; and she pays the tremendous penalty of her crime—a crime which her husband ought to have prevented.

Mr. Transport of the starting a mediana of the timil.

Mrs. Trelawney forms a striking specimen of the "wilfulness of woman;" but we hope and trust there are very few women in the world so wilful, and so silly withal, as Mrs. Trelawney. Her husband is a creature too contemptible for notice. He and the pretty but worthless "widow Tryon" deserved to have been "tied tegether."

As a sketch, Mrs. Harrington is good; as a fluished portrait, that rough diamond, Dr. Meadows, is admirable. Allowing for objections urged, the reader will not fail to be gratified by a perusal of this work.

The Duc de Feltre, who was indebted for everything to Napoleon, abandoned him on his first reverse of for-tune, and became a Royaliste Esugéré. Some time after his second abdication, the Duke, seeing in the presence of Louis XVIII. an Officer of the Emperor's Old Guard, who had faithfully stood by his late master during the Hundred Days, succeingly asked him how long he had served the Usurper? "Just three mooths longer than the Duc de Feltre," was the reply. The King, who could colish a clever saying, smiled, and handed his snuff-box to the gallant old spidier.

Foreign Affaire.—It is a common idea that the most luconic Military dispatch over usual was that sent by Casar to the Horse Guards at Rome, containing the three memorable words, " Font, vull, vici ?" and, perand, perhaps, until our own day, no like instance of brevity been found. The disputch of Sir Charles Napier, after the capture of Sinds, to Lord Ellenborough, both for brevity and truth, is, however, far beyond it. The disputch consisted of one emplate word—" Peccavi," "I have Sinds" (slaned).—Plane.

Might and Main,-Lord Charles Somerset was telling Might and Main.—Lord Charles Somerast was tening a long stery about his walking in the wonds at the Cape one day, when he came suddenly upon a huge shaggy lion. "Thuking to frighten him," said the Noble Lord, "I ran at him with all my might." "Whereupon," said another, interrupting, "he ran away with all his mane." "Just so," said his Lordship.

and 7 privates. Eighteen troop horses were also cast. which were principally those received by this corps from the 7th Dragoon Guards, there being only three of those purchased by the regiment in Canada found sinfit. This fine corps of eight troops is a great acquisition to the city of Canterbury, and their splendid appearance, together with the remarkably orderly and sudderlike conduct of the Non-Com. Officers and men, have gained for them the highest enterm of the inhabitance. The present strength of the regiment now at head-quarters, is 28 Officers, 31 Troop Serj-Majors and Serjeants, 24 Corpoints, 8 Trumpeters, B Facriers, 375 privates, and 356 Hoop-horaes.

4th Light Dragoons-We noticed in our Gauette of the 27th ult. the presentation of a piece of plate to the Rev. E. C. Harrington, by the Non-Commissioned Officers of this Regiment, as a small token of their esteem and regard for him, previous to leaving Exeter; and we have now the pleasure of annexing a letter from the Rev. Chaplain :-To the Non-Commissioned Officers and men of the 4th Quecu's

To the Non-Commissioned Officers and men of the 4th Queen's Own Light Bragoous.

Dear Friends,—In actepting your very kind present received this morning from Capitan Bordon Comming, through the medium to Lleut. Cot. Daly, germit me, while I confailly thank you, to express my great gratification at your appreciation of my mumble labours as your chaplain during the past yeas. It is at all times a matter of congratulation to a dergyman when his remarks, spoken in truth and fatrness, have been received in the spirit in which they were delivered; and, believe me, that your kind expression of "vereem and regard," is more than a compensation for my brief—though I trust, by God's bleening, not altogether fruitless—ministrations.

In continuing my services as chaplain amongst those who may succeed you, the gratifying inscription on your kind present will there and support my, if nonbis and difficulties should occur in the exercise of my cirrical duties.

With every sincere wish for your spiritual and temporal welfare, believe me, dear friends,

Your sincere friends,

12th Lancers—Major Goneral Sir W. Warre made his half-yearly inspection of this regiment on Saturday last, at Hangh Green, and passed some well-merited culogiums as to the appearance of the men, and fine condition of their horses; no other result could be expected, from the constant attention of their old veteran Commander, Col. Stawell, and reflects great credit on their system. The Officers entertained Sir Thomas Arbuthnot, Officers Commanding regiments, and the Heads of Departments, afterwards, with an excellent dinner.

INFANTRY.

-We have been requested to state that the gentleman calling himself Licut. Finlay, who addressed an Anti-war meeting at Preston, was not Lieut. Finlay of the 6th Reg., there stationed, but a retired Officer who served in the 43d Reg., and sold out of the Army more than 20 years ago.

11th-Maj.-Clen. Sir Guy Campbell inspected the Reg. at Athlone, also the hospital, and men for discharge, the school and barracks, &c., and when he had concluded, expressed himself in terms of the highest approbation to Sir M. Creagh, stating that a finer body of men, or a better disciplined corps, he had rarely met with.

32d—This regt. was inspected in Malford Barcacks on Monday, and made a most brilliant appearance. Sir William Warte, the Inspecting General, complimented them very highly, as they rightly operated. The 32d in all probability will embark very shortly for Ireland, that destination having been intimated to them; they have now been quartered with the 67th Regiment seven months, and both Officers and men are on the best terms. The Service has benefited out of the good-humoured smulation existing between the corps, and both have been much im-

SIE,-The Earle without a head which fell into our tion at the battle of Salamanca, must have been found lying on the ground, as was the case with that which was picked up by a Lieutenant of the 2d Brigade, 44th, h regiment remained in second line during the action.

As the flight of this latter bird was arrested in its course by the front line, warmly engaged with the enemy, it may be considered a trophy of the 5th Division generally, but certainly not that of any regiment or individual in particular; or, if you will, that of Colonel Greville's Br gude, which formed the front line. The Lieut. of the 4-1th proceeded, I believe, to head quarters with the Ragle, with a view to obtain a company, but was of course un-successful, from the manner in which he became possessed of it.

ONE OF COLONEL GREVILLE'S BRIGADE AT THE BATTLE OF SALAMANCA.

49th-A Court-Martial was held at the Main Guardwith—A Court-Martial was field at the Main Guard-house, Portsmouth, on the 15th instant, on private Philip Castre, of the Ri. Marines, for having dangerously assaulted private John Paddick, 49th Reg., whilst sential at the Laudport gate on the night of 30th April. (See N. & M. Gusette, 11th May.) It appeared from the evidence, that on the above evening the prisoner, with these extenses and appeared to the castial court. with three others, endeavoured to pass the scutinch at the above gate, but being unable to produce any pass or ticket of leave, he (sentine) refused them permission to pass, being then between 11 and 12 o'clock, whereupon the presoner wrenched his bayonet from his piece, and indicted a dangerous wound in the bank of the prosecutor, assisted by the other soldiers. Fortunately, l'aymaster Bemford, 59th, was passing the spot at the time, and finding the sentinel on the ground bleeding from wound in the shoulder, he questioned him, and pursued to get away, and succeeded, but was eventually recaptured by Mr. Bamford, and brought to trial. There not, however, being sufficient legal evidence to substantiate the charge against the prisoner, he was acquitted.

Ri. Marines,-The lat Div. at Chatham was inspected on 16th inst., by Maj. Gen. the Hon. B. P. Lygon, accom-panied by his Major of Brigade, Lieut.-Col. Lord de Roos. A battalion of about 600 men, in heavy marching order, under the command of Col. Elias Lawrence, the Commandant, formed into line, and opened rank, when the General, accompanied by the various Officers, passed along the lines, and after inspecting several of the men's necessaries, the battalion was dismissed to their dinners. General Lygon, with his attendant Officers, then inspected the barracks, and the girls' and boys' schools. children underwent an examination in geography, navigation, arithmetic, and other studies, calling forth the warmest expressions of approbation from the gallant General. In the afternoon the battalio a sgain assembled, and was marched on to the lines at Chatham, where they went through the duties of a field-day. The steady and excellent firing of the companies was duly acknowledged by General Lygon.
The annual inspection of the Portsmouth Division

took place on Thursday, at Southsea-common, by Major-Gen, the Hon. Sir H. R. Pakenham, K.C.B., &c., Lieut.-Governor of Portsmouth garrison, Adj. Gen. J. Owen, K.H., and Col.-Commandant G. Jones. The men went through the various evolutions and formations with the greatest precision, and chrited the warmest culogium from the General and Staff. The Royal Murine Artillery excited the wonder of their commanders and spectators by their extraordinary speed in limbering and unlimbering their guns, firing, &c. which was all per-formed in the incredibly short space of one minute. On the following day the field operations were resumed, though not on the same ground, the scene of action being removed to Cumberland Fort, about four miles from Portsmouth, where the operations performed were of the most astounding character. The various regiments forming the garrison of the fort and of Portsmouth taking the parts respectively of besiegers and defenders, which the encelight space around the fort on the shore side as-sisted admirably to display. The Officers of the Rt. Marine Corpu three p'alook. gave a splendid "spread" to their Colonel and Adjutant-General. To the Editor of the Nanal and Milliary Cavelle.

Sing-in your last Number I regret to observe that One of Last War is again in the field in behalf of the Royal Artillery, and, I need not add, against the Boyal

His observations on the comparative Retirements of the a century, Egypt, Stelly, Mediterranean, Jameica, and to corps are occased in any but a fair or friendly spirit; Coylon.

1d. if they were answered in a similar ettain, obtain not 03d—Lieut. Loce has succeeded Lieut: Thorseon on prove otherwise than highly injurious to the cause he pro-fesses to advecate. I did hope that the reply clicited by his last production would have convinced him of the justice of the adage respecting "those who live in houses of glass," &c.; but it seems I was mistaken, and had given him credit for discretion, foresight, and, above all. Acasesy of purpose, which he does not possess.

My object in addressing you is not to depreciate the Royal Artiflary (on the contrary, I sincerally rejoice at their prosperity), but to inquire of this Officer, of the last war, in what position he considers the ten Colonels-Commendants of Battalions in the Artillery to be !-- not on 700L a year, be it remembered, but, as it has always been understood, on 1100L s year. If, with the solitary exception of Lord Bloomfield, they are not to all intents and purposes retired, I contess I do not understand what retirement means. Give to the Marines, with nearly double the number of men, the same number of Colonels-Commandant, at the same rates of pay, &c., and half the number of Field Officers in the other ranks, and now the number of Field Officers in the other ranks, and you will hear no more complaints from them. In the single rank of Colonel (Commandants not included) the Royal Artillery have as many Field Officers (minus two), as the binnines have in every grade, Commandants and Staff included! And from those Colonandants and Staff included! nels no duty is expected, nor performed, except it is by their own desire, but they are at liberty to dispose of themselves as they please; this I think is also something not very unlike a retirement. It is not my wish to pro-long this distasteful subject, but I must not closs this without drawing your attention to a milarapresentation, of which I am convinced your correspondent was well aware, when he made it in his first letter-I mean when he says the Marines have three Mejor-Generals retired. Now, Sir, the Marines, unfortunately for them, have but two Major-Generals belonging to them, and those are relired not na Major-Generals, but as Colonels-Commundant.

The only other General Officer in the corps—a Lieut.-General, is on the retired list as a Lieutenant-Chlonel. Your correspondent well knew this when he wrote his letter, and he must have known also that the eighteen Maj. Generals in the Artillery he alludes to, on unattached-pay, never held the rank of Colonel-Commandant in of Colonel-Commandant in their own corps; whenever they do reach that rank, their retirements will be much better than that of any Marine Officer. In regard to his remark of the Marines baving a head in the Nuvy, I shall only say that it applies equally to the Artillery, which is as much a subordinate corps to the Army; and if the long talked of plan, of placing the Ordnance under the Horse Guards, is carried into effect, as it night to be, if the public good is consulted, use his own words, One of Last War may find that many of the advantages, exclusively possessed by his regiment, will not be much longer retained. He is wrong, however, if he supposes the Marines wish for any other head than the Navy; all they ask is their fair share of honours and rewards. I would only in conclusion strongly advise your correspondent, if he has the good of Artillery at heart, to exercise his telents in any other way, and not provoke a retaliation which must end in a way anything but advantageous and satisfactory to the Service to which I suppose him to belong. I am, &c., Private Sutton, alles Green, of the Woolwich division, received corporal punishment on Tuesday morning, in presence of the corps, to the extent of one hundred and fifty lashes, having been found guitty by a Court-Martini of absenting himself, and making away with his regimental necessaries; and in consideration of his former convictions, and general had conduct. Private Sutton has been 18 months in the Woolwich division; but through his rregularities had not been returned complete for duty, subough the average period of retraits perfecting themselves for that branch of the Service does not in general exceed two months or ten weeks. Since his calimment, private Sutton deserted three fieres, and twice perjuted private Sutton deserted three flates, and twice perjured himself, by enlisting into regiments of the line, and has been branded with the letter D 1 and so hardened, and apparently irreclaimable is he, that the punishment is fleted upon him on Tuesday has had but little effect upon him, as he was observed to wish at the sentry on being conveyed to the Mespital affer he had received the sentence of the Court-Marsial.

67th—This excellent corps was reviewed in Salford Berracks, on Saturday last, by Maj.-General Warre, who mide his half-yearly inspection, when the standiness exhibited by the corps elicited the marked approbation of the Major-Gueral and other witnesses. The progress of this regiment towards re-organisation fully exemplifies what can be done by system, for it was manifest that the men performed their evolutions with the same steadings: throughout, whether mencouvred by the Commanding Officer, or an Easign. (The Major General having spared no grade in this respect.) This is the more remarkable, as this corps had been sent on detachment with 300 recruits, before there was any possibility of their being reformed—furnishing detachments to Oldham, Staley Bridge, and Ashton, of one company each for the last six months; and during the turn out of the colliers, at St. Helen's, they were employed on that duty also. Now it must be highly gratifying to Col. Bunhary and the Officers of this corps, that their exertions have gained the approbation and goodwill of those connected with the Service; and also affording a strong example of the value of unanimity and good feeling, which there can be no doubt exists throughout.

She fell in on 19th with the Alert, 6, Com. Bosenquet, off the port, which was the Alert, 6, Com. Bosenquet, off the port, which was despatched the next day to Ascension, to return summediately to Sierra Leone with stores and supernumeraries for the Penelope. It was reported that on 20th Capt. Jones had received information of a slaver on the coast, of 24 guus, and capable of stowing 1000 slaves, in search of which the Penclope was despatched at daylight the following morning. 1). Woodruffe, Lieutenant in command, fr. Phipps, mate, of the Albert steam frigate, on the coast of Africa, have invalided home. Penclope fell in with no vessel of war during her passage from Lisbon.

The Rapid's boats, under the command of Lient. G. C. Earle, on 15th Feb., captured a fine, large, heavilyarmed Spanish slaver pirate, after a smart resistance of an hour, with only a loss of one killed and one wounded. This slaver, a brigantine, had beaten off the bosts of the Spy, Lieut.-Com. S. O. Wooldridge, about six weeks prior to being taken by the Rapid, and had bossted that the boats of no man-of-war on that station should capture her. She has, however, found her error. Hydra, H. B. Young, Commander, was in company with the Rapid at Ascension on 25th March, when the Rattle-snake left for England.

At a late hour on Friday last, 17th, orders were received at Woolwich to hold the Lightning steam-vessel in readiness to preceed to Ireland, and at 1 o'clock, p.m. on Saturday, Rear-Adm. Sir Hugh Pigot, C.B. and K.C.H., appointed, as stated in our last, to succeed Rear-Adm. William Bowles, C.B., in command of the squadron of vestels and war-steamers on the coast of Ireland, arrived by one of the river st.-packets at Woolwich, and embarked in the Lightning, and shortly after left for his destination. The gallant Officer was made Rear-Admiral of the White, 16th Jan., 1837, and will hoist his flag in the Volage, 26, at present stationed at the Cove of Cork, under the charge of Capt. Sir Wm. Dickson, Bart.

H.M.'s STEAM-VESSEL "SHEARWATER." - Large, N.B., May 18.—A deplorable event occurred yesterday afternoon, whereby two enterprising young Officers, belonging to H.M.'s at. v. Sheerwater, were suddenly drowned. Mr. E. Cayley, Midshipman, and Mr. W. N. Jewell, Master's-Assistant, were sailing in a host between Jewell, Master-A-assistant, were satting in a near netween. Fairest was in the offing, and proceeded immediately to the spat, as also the bests of H.M.'s st.-v. Shearwater; but although only a few minutes clapsed they were both gone, having been probably entengied in the boat's rigging. Their caps were picked up, and every affort will be unde for the recovery of their bodies. This sad event has deprived the Service of two young gentlemen of great promise. They were deservedly esteemed and beloved by their Officers and They were imates; and the auxiety as to their fate, evinced by were held in on shore. Mr. Cayley was soon of Mr. Cayley, M.P. of North Riding. Yorkshire; and Mr. Jewell, son of Licut. W. N. Jewell, R.N.

The Admiralty have determined that in the trial cruises of the new experimental twelve-gun brigs, none of them shall gain an advantage over the others in point of sailing, at the expense of their capabilities and efficiency as men-of-war, which has too frequently been the case with vessels in trying their rate of sailing, when in order to get a-head or to windward of their opponents, their guns have been removed from their breechings, and sent aft or below. In the forthcoming trials between the Espiegle, Mutine, Daving, Osprey, and Flying Fish, not a single gun will be allowed to be removed from its proper place, as it is the object of the Admiralty to text the capabilities of these vessels in carrying their armament, spurs, stores, &c., as well as to test their relative speed. All of them are to be manned, armed, provi-sioned, watered, and stored alike, and are even to be rigged alike, and not upon the plane of their respective Commanders, as their standing rigging is to be fitted by the riggers of the dockyards where they are lying, Portsmouth and Chatham, and is not to be altered after they are put in commission.

Stopford, and Vindictive, 50, Capt. T. Nicolas, from South America, and the Pacific; Madagasear, 44, Capt. J. Foote, from Coast of Africa; Queen, 110, Capt. Sir C. Sullivan, and Indus, 78, Capt. Sir J. Stirling, from the Mediterranean. Most of the foregoing ships are already on their passage to England, and some of them are looked for daily. Illustrious, 72, Capt. J. E. Erskine, with the flag of V. Adm. Sir C. Adam, will return to England the latter end of the summer, when the time of service of the Gallant Admiral, as Commander-in-Chief in the West Indies, will expire.

Hong-Kong .-- A Court-Martial was held on board 11.M.S. Minden, on 5th January, to try two scamen for desertion, Rear-Adm. Sir T. Cochrane, President. were found guilty, and sentenced to receive 100 lashes each. Accordingly, fourteen boats were manned and armed, and at daylight, on the 9th, a gun was fired from the Agincourt, and the yellow flag holated at her fore-top-gallant-mast-head, and kept there until the punishment was over. It was rather un astonishing sight to the natives, although many of their punishments are more severs. Lieut. Hancock has been appointed to the Min-Mr. Wise, late Clerk of the Cornwallis, has gone to England in the Childers. February 2d .- The Dide has sailed, with her Purser under arrest. A very severe accident has happened to Mr. Aplin, Midshipman, of the Agincourt. He was out shooting, when by some strange mismanagement the gun went off, and both his hands being over the muzzle, the contents passed through them. The medical men have not yet been able to determine whether it will be necessary for him to loss either or both of his hands. Mr. Whipple, Assist.-Surgeon, happened fortunately to be on the spot, or the unfortunate sufferer would have died from loss of blood. It is proposed to sake the Supphire, troop-ship, a bulk or hospital she is found to be in too week a state to be trusted on a voyage to England. Should this to done, it is most likely the Minden will be sent home. Peb. 18th.—The Proserging, iron-steamer, Capt. Hough, has been on shore and knocked a hole in her bottom, and is now on the beach, undergoing repair. Feb. 14th.—11.M.'s surveying-vessel, Samurang, is just arrived. The Second Licutemant, Wade, is under close arrest, and will, it is generally supposed, be tried by a Court-Martial.

The Janus steam aloop, built at Chatham by the Earl of Dundonald, is being fitted with her eugines and boilers, and will, as soon as ready, try her capabilities in the river. The novelty of her construction, her head and starn being alike, so that she can proceed either way without the necessity of turning, has caused her to be looked upon with some interest.

H.M.S. Fernon was paid off on the 22d at Sheerness; and between 10 and 11 o'clock at night, 32 of her seamen arrived at the "Sailors' Home," and lodged in the safe enatedy of the officers of the institution 3241., part of their wages. We need not add, how likely it is greater part of this money would have been secured by the werthiess wratches who are on the look-out to plun-der seamen, if the "Sallors' Home" had not existed.

Mr. Webb enjoyed good health almost to the last, and died highly esteemed by all who knew him. He has left an only niens, who is married to a gentleman named Matthews, whom he has appointed his sole executor.

NAVAL FORCES OF FRANCE.

The object of the present note is to call the attention of serious minds to the state of our Navy. The country, to which the instinct of its real interests is never wanting, will have a Navy, and it will have it strong and powerful, This will is revealed by undeniable facts. But the casential elements and real conditions of this force, the want of which is felt, are not yet well known; that which passes is not sufficiently inquired into, and the way in which the sums voted by the Chambers are employed in not sufficiently studied. We still live upon the old prejudice that one must be a sailor, or possess themselical and practical knowledge of quite a special nature in order to become acquainted with Nevel affans. And this prejuduce, maintained by various circumstances, has hitherto prevented many a sensible men from devoting himself to the study of the real state of our Naval power.

The author of this note would, by adducing some facts of the clearest evidence, some very simple calculations and researing within the reach of everybody, dispel the darkness in which the question is, as it were, gratuitously involved; said should be succeed in rendering it accessible and familiar to all those who may be called upon to decide on it, he will down that he has done real service to an arm he belongs to.

I believe I can state, without fear of contradiction, that the popularity the Navy enjoys in France, and the ardent and so often manifested wish of herbig a strong and powerful Navy, derive their source from a feeling that may be thus interpreted in"On sea, as on land, we will be respected. There, as class where, we wish to be condited to protect our interests, to main takin our independence, to defend our homour, from whatever quarter may come the attacks which may threats a beau."

And, before I go further, I wish it to be well under stood that I do not pretend to meddle with politics in this note, which is solely devoted to the affairs of the Nasy. If I speak at England, or of any other power, it shall not be from a narrow spirit of animosity or even material rivalry, but only to show, by that which passes among foreign nations, what we should seek for, and what we should avoid. If I speak of war, it is not that I wish to see my country exchange the blessings of peace for ruinous No. hazards. No. I only think that, is order that peace may be dignified and durable, it must be supported by a force ever capable of causing it to be respected. Taking, therefore, a case of war for the basis of my reasoning, shall seek an example that may illustrate my thoughts, and I shall suppose France obliged to defend herself against the strongest of the maritime powers; this is to name England. Having stated this, and proceeding in quite an abstract and hypothetical way, I suter upon my name Ragiand. Having stated this, and processing in quite an abstract and hypothetical way, I suter upon my subject.

A fact of immense scope which has been accomplished for some years past, has given us the means of raising our failen Naval power, and of making her re-appear in a new shape admirably adapted to our resources and national gesius. This fact is the setablishment and progress of steam-nayigation.

Our Navy would be hat a factitious creation when the empire of the sea he/paged to those who sent short ballors to sea. Our related merchant Navy so longer supplied as snough sealors. We simult have energetically struggled to groups affronts and obliterate mournels resoliactions; but even had transient successes borne teatimony to the barvary of our sailors, numbers would have ultimately crushed our efforts. The steam-Navy has changed the face of bilings; it is now our Military resources which are taking the place of pur impoverabled Naval personnel. We shall always have Officers and scames enough to emet the part allotted to the acaman in a steam-ship. The machinery, then soldiers to support the hopour of the country.

With a steam Navy the boldest thur of aggression is permitted at sea. We are anne of our movements, and free to act as we please. Time, the winds said tides, will slarm us no more. We reak on a fixed days and hours. In the event of a Empirement war the past unexpected diversions are possible. Armies can be conveyed in a few hurse from France to Italy, Holland, and Frasas. That which has been once done at Ausona, with a rapidity seconded by the winds, can be done very day without them, and simust against them, with still greater rapidity.

As I just now said, these naw resources admirably suit us; and the first of war thus profifes, our house early have the encaphage. It is therefore agricults use to what a degree the progress of steam, and its possible employment.

The bow said, these naw resources admirably suit us; and the first of year the progress of steam, and its possible employment.

gation, and the use that spight be made of it in case of another war.
This warning is a good one to firest Britain; it is also a good warning to all that has atgength has to the confidence her insolar position inspires her said. Those the confidence her insolar position has been allowed in the English Parliament should resound in a Wiolescope way in our Chambers and throughout France; our lipse of conduct should be contest out by our very neighbours. But such is not the case we cross our arms, and England acts; an discuss theories, and she pursues her appropriates. She creates with activity a formidable steam force, and regimes the number of her sailing ships, the importance of which she has acknowledged. We, who should have preceded her in that reform, or at least, should follow her in it with ardour, scarcely have we, among our steam vessels six capable of maintaining a comparison with those of the British Navy.

it with arrour, searney many capable of the British capable of meintaining a comparison with those of the British Navy.

It is said to say it, but we have slumbered, and the country has been made to slumber with flattering words and erroneous figures; the country has been persuaded that it had a strong and respectable steam Navy—a deployable error—the source of a condicipce more deployable with.

I am not one of those who, in the filtusion of antional amourprepure, believe that we are in a state to struggle, on equal terms, with the lightsh power, but neither do I wish it to be said that in no case we can resist it.

My decided opinion is, that we can wage was against any power whatnever, were it England, and that, re-establishing a sort of equality by the indiblate employment of our resources, we can, if not obtain firiting ancome, at least march asfely towards our object, which must be to scene to France the panks we shall take good ours not to compromise all our resources at once in decisive gueonabers.

that belongs to her. Our successes will not be striking, because we shall take good care not to open propise all our proposes at once in decisive guconaters.

But we shall wage way safely, because we shall attack top things equally universible—the confidence of the English people in their mentar position, and their mentione commetce.

Who can doubt that with a steam-Navy, strongly organized, we shall have the means of industing on heatile coasts to spa and sufferings unknown to a nation which has never felt the raiseries that warleads to 'And alrear such sufferings would come the evil, equally new to it, of lost confidence. The wealth accumulated on its coasts and ports would have ceased to be in safety, and that whist by fidding of well managed cruising, of which I shall beteather develop the plan, we should efficiently set against its commetce, spread over the whole surface of the seas. The stringle would, therefor, no longer the or unequal?

I continue to revise on the supposition of a war. Our steam-Navy would then have two very distinct theatres of action; first or all the Channel, where our parts could shelter a considerable force, which, issuing from them at night, would stare the most numerous and bleeset criticals. Nothing would prevent that force from assembling, score dawn, at a settled point on the British coast, and acting their with impusity. Sir Saney Smith required but a few hours to do us irreparable injury at Toulou.

In the Mediterranean we should rule as masters; we should strate and our civilisation; and, then, the Mediterranean is too.

for from England. It is not the arsensis of Maits and Gibratter that will be able to maintain a steam fleet, so difficult and expensive to provide, and always in dread of being reduced to instain for want of fuel. France is, therefore, at liberty to act victoriously on that theatre; she may accomplish all her projects with steam-ships without caring for saling ships, the whole vigilance of which will be frustrated, and swiftness untartimed.

seitori in it wass or such, speaker in, secomplish all her projects with steam-ships without caring for salling ships, the whole vigilance of which will be frustrated, and evifuneas outstripped.

To the steam Navy, and to it close, is also reserved the part of watching our coast and sanoancing the enemy's approach, to cover our coacting trade, and opposing by force, when that can be done, landings, hombendments, and all stacks of the enemy for it is useless to observe that a steam Mavy cannot give us advantages that cannot be tassed against us. Helf of our frestlers is a maritime frontier. Formerly that wast extend of coast could be defended by our land forces, almost everywhere inaccessible, or at least of difficult secres to sailing ships, landings on it were little to be dreaded, and the important points, the great parts and places where nature had done nothing for the defence, art had places where nature had done nothing for the defence, at the process of the instance of the respect to the force beyond all stacks. Now, all is changed; with streng ships, our coasts may be reached throughout their vast extent; from lunkirk to Bayonne, England can do against us all that we can do against her. Is a few hours, an Army embarked is a steam fiect at Portsmouth of in the Thumes, will present itself on some point of pur shores, pengitate into our rivers, affect a landing or destroy with the bomb our towns, arrenals, and commercial riches. The rapidity of its movements will insure its success. The French Army, its forts and cannon cannot be everywhere at the same time, and we shall hear at the same time of the appearance of the enemy, of the accomplishment of their projects, and of their departure. At this hour, if a declaration of war were to take place, we should, perhaps as early as next day, there of the destruction of Dinkirk, Boutoner, if a declaration of breath on a steam hour. We should have the sorter to take place, the should have the sorter of the destruction of punkirk, Boutone, if a declaration of their p recollections.

Since the progress of navigation caused the abandoamont of guileys (this is rather ancient), each State has had its squadrons or assendiances of sailing vessels, as the expression of its Naval strength. The French and English flasts disputed, during a century and a half, the compire of the sea, and after long and sangularry struggles the firstsh flag moved a conqueror and master, from one end of the globe to the other. The French Navy might have been considered annihilated.

Yet it was not ampthilated, and peace bringing back tranquility, confidence, and commerce, our merchant navigation was enabled to employ and rear sailors enough to make a squadron of twenty sail of the line display with honour, in 1840, the French dag in the Mediterrangem.

Many persons were duzzled by so brilliant a result, they are.

ity, confidence, and commerce, our merchant navigation was enabled to employ and rear sations smough to make a squadron of twenty sail of the line display with humour, in 1840, the French diag in the Medispraneau.

Many persons were dazzled by so brilliant a result; they sormorefully beheld that the fleet condemned to inaction, when the national feeling was so greatly wounded in them. We had, at that moment, were the British squadron, the superiority of organisation and numbers. Our seasons, commanded by an able and active chief, were will overcosed, and overything promised them victory. I do not haveke here my recollections, but those of the silest Officers of the English Navy.

Lat as suppose that the quaried had been then engaged; let us appose that the God of battles had been then engaged; let us appose the the God of battles had been then engaged; let us appose the the God of battles had been favourable to France; grive of by would have been thought that the triumph must have been promised throughout the kingdom. It would not have been thought that the triumph must have been promised to the ablest and most persecuting, hat it will have been used dearly bought, and on both sides the loss will have been enormous, several ships being destroyed, or how the constant. It follows that each will re-enter his port with a runned aquadron, and the loss of the best Officers and seamen.

But I will suppose that which is unexampled: I admit that twenty ships and fifteen thousand English prisoners can ever be brought yet. Toulon by our yetcorloss squadron. Will the victorly be the more declared? But were a guardens. Will the victorly be the more declared? But were a guardens. Will the victorly be the more declared? I had who, when an outraness is to be averaged, is accustoned to recken his sacriface? To all such as know the Riggish people, it is evident bust, in such specially our ports. Many a time in the course of her history, France, when deemed without soldiers, has produced thousands as by marie; but such is not the case with Fients. The seames is not improving, he is an artificial vortiges who, unjues brought up from the childhood for the sea, always remains in unavoidable inferierity. Since the time we have been striving to make sallors, we have ancested, its must be dweed, in having people who have no sea-sickness; but the name of a sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the same of a sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the sallor is not obtained on such says the says t

Here are the wreeks of our victorious squadron, either blockaded or asselfed by namerous forces, which, to the power of their organisation supersid the strient deute of avenging the defeat. The fruit of sincess and of bloodshed is cost. The superiority of a moment can no longer be called a victory, since it has left behind it but the certainty of impending reverses, and that, because without foreseeing the morrow, we shall have becaused all our resources at the same time.

It is, therefore, elegar that ships can no longer form the very body of our Nayal power; the employment of steamers reduces them by force to the Sabaltern destination of alega Artillery in a land Artiy. They will be led out after the steam quadrons, when the expedition shall have a determined object, when it will be required to act against a fort or a maritime form, which is to be battered with a large mass of guns assembled at the same point. Beyond that services will not be demanded of them which they cannot, and speaking conder, and care will be taken not to persevere out of snaggerated respect for angient traditions in a dangerous path, as the end of which there might some day be a most serious account to give to undeceived France.

some day be a most serious account to give to undeceived France.

For my own part, I should not hesitate to enter from this very day the contrary road, shid I should explicitly gut to my self the question, whether to maintain eight armed ships and sight in commission, in order only to derive from them no other advantage than that of striking from afar superficial observers, he not a great deal too much.

The author them examines and combats the argument adduced in favour of line-of-hattle ships, and goints to the segracity with which England has relinquished the old instruments of her power, and the success with which he distinguished procure a powerful impulse to theire, which no longer suffices for the wants of peace, and would be far from yielding due resources in war. If a real picture of the French steam Navy were drawn, it would be found that out of the 43 steamers affort, authorised by the budget, there are not as that can stand a comparison with the English attamers. After a brief mention of the expense of maintaining sulling ships and steamers, the Prince desire that he has satisfactorily demonstrated that a steam fleet is slowe calculated, at the present day for offensive and defensive or which he would anagment, reminding the reader of the great injury intended to English trade when at the latter and of the remand however, very tayourable to frigates, the number of which he would augment, reminding the reader of the great injury inflicted on English trade when at the latter end of the regin of Napoleon divisions of frigates left the French perts with orders against an enemy superior in number. The following is the energiation of the "Nobe our "Estat des Forces Envales de la France."—

IRELAND NO FUE ARMY.

To the Editor of the first and Military Genetic.

Siz.—Some time has clayed since I addressed you on the subject of this country; and, while string you the testimony of an eye-a tness, butching the splift from you on the subject of entering the spirit the the toutimony of an eye-stress, touching the spirit the evidently abroad amongst its people, inclining them towards an early outhrest of tabellies, advantured an optimism touching the year almost probability of that spirit between an ever rising to the evidently abroad amongs its people, inclining them co-wards an early outhrests of taballies, advantured an opl-nion touching the yeer slader probability of that spirit, despite the intensity of its hitterness, ever rising to the dignity of actual violence. In forwarding to you a few random reflections on the present aspect of affairs on this side of the water, I can only repeat the aphaesance of my former opinion, and aver with certainty the atter impose-sibility that still exists of foreseeing, in any way, the "end" that shall be to the somewhat ominous "begin-ming" of seditions, which has already created as much sterp amongst the well-disposed of Her Majesty aub-jects, and pressed not a likite heavily on the "Army in Ireland." There seems indeed, to any one going much amongst the mass of the purple of this country—kanongst the passantry as well as no dwillers in the towns—an almost wearisoms sameness of spirit and feeling as to the great scheme of Repeal—altogged and unreasoning per-cial and the faith in the speches and promises of Taniel O'Connell and his followers—as hopelessly and universally prevalent maps, as some six ponths tack. No cleange has been worked in their hearts lince the great receiving have been put down—aince the sell greater arisings her of their been worked in their hearts hince the great meetings have been put down—since the still greater oriminals who summoned them have been brought before the bar of their mountry. All are still salusand candident—peaceful, it is true, (save when from their to time one of their community sugages in a little who sale murder,) but exulting in the probable result of the interminable trials—still Repealers—value forious, credulous, enthus lastic Repealers? with a blessing on the great Agilator on their lips, and are curse on the banon in their hearts; still bound up heart and soul in the patient shorteners of future greatness. curse on the Saxon in their hearts; still hound up heart and soul in the patient epictuncy of future greatness, expressed in the now almost indicrous national watchword, "We bide our time"—their slumbering flane of discontent and disaffection over kept from estirely dying; away, by the indefatigable exertions of a newspaper press, redolent of treason. The actual misories their social position, the realities of their suffering and the grievous nature of he barden they have top to bear under hard-hearted landlords—with these brought daily before them, magnified, distorted in expressible manner by every local broad-sheet of sedition's brought daily before them, magnified, distorted in the possible manner by every local broad-shaet of sedition's the empire—they go on, ever hoping on, and, dispite the hurning sense of their widness, thus stirred its freensy, continue at the word of their leaders to let." I days not wait upon I would," to the end of the chapter. So far all is well. But there is one fact arising from the present temper of the messes in Iraand, and their complete severance as to kindly sympathy and good will from the sistes country—one sign of the times sufficiently startling, and by a close observer not to be mistaken—and which, as connected with the popular demand for legislative independence, and at once, as I were, forming its most vital part and unimus, and leading by unseen degrees to a Civil War for complete separation, you may not consider altogether out of plate in a Military Journal. I allude to the cry that has undoubtedly gone forth, and found an echo is the breast of nearly every Papist in this laisned—the cry—rain-gloridus, and without bops or reason. island—the cry—rain-gloridas, and without hope or reason, if you will, but not the less stern in its pseudo-prophetic and visionary patriotism, that "Ireland shall be a session!" Apart from the serious considerations of the wickedness and folly of these whose influence and example have been so long excited in every possible way, in the encouragement and propagation of the aforessid sentiment of independent raisonality, in instilling into the minds of the people the conviction that their dependence on England is a degradation, this claim for a placeon England is a degradation, this claim for a place amongst the nations is not the least amoning phase in factions—the sort of underenviews of quiet reasoning of all hinds, the deepest and intermignally unobtruste accura-of argument, carried on with factiring energy from week to week, and day to day, both by the written distribe and spoken harangue of all who damone for Ropesi, with a view to entring up the mines of their deluded follow; countrymen to a steedy nearly polition of the facilities; as well as complete necessity of an undivided existence as

Where is it to be found as one race, (used and making from many races into one, with a national such as the first maken races into one, with a national such as the first matter? As a glever writer in the Specialar enserved some months back, we are utterly at a loss to say of what this Irish nation is to consist, or where it is to be band, in the mass of population so divided amongst themselves, so hitterly set explines as and other by religious fenatisism and intolerance, which make our the glorious 80,000 Let us ask what analogy exists, or one exist, between the inhabitants of Ireland of this day, representatives in blood of so many different or expediency,—this estand alone, is founded or can exist, between the inhabitants of kreised of this day, representatives in blood of so many different races, descendants at pune of Northman and Lame, Sexon and Celt, Spiniard and Phenician, and the barbarous Celtic recollections and savage associations of the sarly periods of rish history to which we are convictionally referred, when a miserable septs of a few them-assats the original native slaughtered each other unceraingly. Yet it is of such stuff that the great amongst the Repeal writers would fall create a mitional spirit! Verity, it is almost too much for one's risible taculties when one considers for an instant the imposture of periodism, that would induce men, in order to get at sampthing of glavy and greatness in the history of their country, wherein the strong hand of the haled Sexon had not been to take refuge in the most beginted and rude periods of her number in the most beginted and rude periods of her number in the century, and only consider as about on a par with that of the New Zulanders. # To Menders and Correspondents.

"Master Look-out's" production may be very clever, but has so many points, that we cannot understand which one in particular the writer really intends us to recommend. We advise him to employ a great deal more con-sideration before he ventures to put his ideas in print.

"Justitia" (Buth), who writes respecting an "unin-tentional omission," should have supplied a correct copy of the report.

To "Rangoon" (Parkhurst Barracks) .- The Burmess Prize-Money is now in course of payment at Chelsea, and there is a considerable persion of the Batta granted for the same campaign still unblaimed from the War-office.

To "Philomathes." - We shall be glad of the parti-oulars through any friend visiting this country.

A Correspondent whose last communication is from Waterford, is requested in future to adhere to one signature, in order to have attention.

To " Miles."-If it were necessary to adduce a preredent for the granting a medal or cross to the Peninsular Officers after a long lange of time, such might be found in the kingdom of Wurtembery, where the present King some three or four years since oreated a decoration for the Officers who had served in the campaign of 1813-14.

A Correspondent, "Miles," last week refers to a recent assertion by Some other Correspondent, that Sir Charles Napler supports the opinion " that men of ancient lineage make the best Officers." We cannot at present find the paragraph, but unless "Miles" has misinterpreted it, it misinterprets Sir Charles Napier. What that distin--men whose money has done for them that which neither birth nor equoution had vouchsafed—are which neither dirth nor equation new vonoscopic — in the aversion of the soldiers, as is also the young pompose aristocrat. But, generally speaking, the man of ancient lineage with an empty purso makes a good soldier, his family history in some digree connects him from child-hood with the Army. His earliest ideas are associated and have his character a bent that way." To with war, and give his character a bent that way." To the truth of this, the actions of his own illustrious family, with those of not a few other gallant men of either Service, may bear testimony. His pointon, it will be seen, agrees, however, in the main with that of "Miles." It cannot think the latter writer justin ascribing to Capt. Kincaid an inclination "to fatter the powers that bo"—"t least necessity of the powers of the powers. we can discover no truce of such a desire in his works. He also goes too far when he doubts if the great grand-father of the Duke of Willington was "even of yentle funity may claim to have been of gentle blood for very many generations. If our Correspondent, however, is parti-cularly desirous of settling the point, we advise him to determine it by writing to the Admiralty.

The anonymous letter (post-mark Bedfont), is not sufficient to induce us to credit the vharye against a Lieut. Colonel; and further, we have reason to believe that the arty mentioned by this Coprespondent is not the Officer alluded to in our Paper of last week. "Fuell" should in confidence authenticate his former statement.

Riding Masters .- Il'a were misled by a friend we consulted last week before we replied to the an Old Soldier," and we are now enabled to giv and we are now enabled to give a full and correct reply.

The appointments to the Riding School at Muidetone Depot are of three sorts, 1stly-Calets seeking to be Ruling Masters of Regiments, by purchase of Cornetcy or without purchase. These gentlemen are generally young men without ('ominissions, sent to the depot by the Military Secretary of the Communder-in-Chief, whom rests the appaintment, to qualify for appointment to any vacancy. Officers who have sold out of the Army also occasionally allowed to re-enter Masters, by qualifying for the same as the younger as pirant.

2d class are Commissioned Officers of Cavalry corps recking the vacancy in their regiments, who go to Maidstone to qualify.

3d class are old Serjeants sent to qualify for the

SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1844.

SHORTLY after the restoration of Louis XVIII. in Prance, a disease areas, or yather revived with greater force, which might be eated in scaladic des brechures. It may now be said to be at high flood, since one of the Royal Family is infected with it, The French are not only loquacious, but fond of morpopoly in talk; and, as they have no popular meetings, of any field for display, except the Chamber of Deputies, to give scope to their eloquence, they suffer under a sort of rhetorical piethors, and can find no other remedy then by adopting another maledy, and giving vent to their ideas in pamphlets; a pleasant sort of cure it is, for a man may dilate at his pleasure and relieve his mind, without fear of immediate contradiction or refutation.

There may be three reasons for the Prince de Joinville whose lucubration we this day publish, becoming a pamphletser; he may be brim-full of mutical knowledge which wants an outlet; he may have a spice of personal vanity that prompts him to declare " Anch' Io son' pittere : " and lastly, he may wish to court the favour or conciliate that war party in France, whose rancour against this country can never be softened, and whose cry will ever be "Delenda est Britannia." The Prince sets out by disclaiming all hostile feeling, and that he speaks hypothetically; but we must confess his preachings about peace smack marvellously of the manner of O'Connell, who is very grand at that sort of ambiguous style.

Take, for an example of this peaceable feeling, the following passage :---

"Who can doubt but that, with a sham Navy strongly organised, we have the means of inficting on our enemies' coasts lesses and sufferings unknown to a nation which has never felt he miseries that war brings in its train; and at the close of these miseries England would suffer from another evit to which as equally a stranger—that of logit confidence; the riches accommulated on her coasts and in her ports, would have ceased to be placed in security."

Will any one doubt that this paragraph is a lure to the party we have just alluded to? Had the Prince de Joinville been actuated alone by his patriotism and love of his profession, and thought the French maritime resources had not been properly developed, his duty, as a Naval Officer, would have been to have placed his views before the Minister of Marine in the shape of a Memorial; or he might have noticed the matter in his place in the Chamber of Peers. But no: neither of these courses would have given room for display, and in the latter his arguments might have been disputed or contravened; safety lay in the pamphlet, and it would, beside, be a " tub to the whale."

What the Prince brings forward is rather more plausible than true, and many of his inferences are unfounded. Granting that steam will ultimately after the whole course of Naval warfare, it by no meane follows that it will bring the French on an equality with us on the sea; the nature of the tectics will he aftered, but their tendency will be to bring the steam vessels and their crews into more immediate contact. Now, there is no species of fighting in which John Bull more delights, than when it comes to be "fand to fist;" and most of assuredly he will feel himself at home in such a conflict. Witness the whole history of our operations on the coasts of Europe last war, when the large fleets of the enemy were swept from the seas : our antiors maintained their superiority in hoarding, cutting out, and carrying off the vessels of their aliversaries.

The Prince seems to talk of embarking troops in these war steamers; but we would strong wrecommend a calm day, or these half-nick soldiers would not bers much the channel is no longer a wet ditch, but a highway over which Armies may be transported to invade this coun-if-try; this advantage, is vecipious. We should have the re-same means of sinceting an inemy's coast; but it is what he we might have transit the most to apprehend, notwith a s-standing all the vigiliance of our look-out. A calm and foggy night would enable an enemy to throw a body of troops on our shores. Which might at more spec-derable injury and confusion.

We have frequently pointed are this contingency while the Economists were trying to clip off four or five thousand men from our miserable and hard-worked Military force. We hope, therefore, the hint from a French Prince may have more effect, and cause them to reflect on what might be the consequence of their paltry and ill-judged saving, when put in competition with the safety of the country. We have scarcely any troops at home; they are chiefly conduct to Ireland, and the Militis, from disuse, could not be available for six months.

Any uninformed peruser of the Prince de Joinville's letter would imagine that Estland breathed the most investorate animosity against France—that England was eager for war—and that whim England did wage war with France, she devastated the French coast and the fertile plains of France with fire and desolation, renewing the wasting ravages which were committed of old by the buccaneering troops of Edward III: and Henry V. The very reverse of this is the truth. A large portion of the population of France breathest animosity against England, whilst England desires the happiness of the French people. In France, the war harty is powerful; in England, it is small and contemptible. France, when she waged war, made the war food itself, and inflicted unspeakable losses upon the countries which her Armies invaded; but when the British Armies entered France, spoliation was prohibited and punished by the severest penalties, and the British Government paid for the supplies which the French people furnished to her troops. The idea, too, that a nation which is encumbered with a war debt of 800,000,000. has accept the evils of war, is too preposterous to be entertained for a single instant.

Further, when the Princede Poinville imagines that the possession of a Steam Navy by France will enable her to land twenty or thirty thousand on different points of coast, and to ravage them in detail, on account of the When a nation has destroyed or crippied the fosts of the nation with which it is at war, and has acquired a maritime ascendancy, then if it is inclined to indulge in venturesome and generally calamitous descents upon the enemy's equat, it may do so. But to disembark enddenly twenty, or thirty thousand men in an enemy's country before this maritime escendancy is acquired, would be the extreme of folly. If France collected sixty or seventy sail of war-steumers in any given harbour, with the intent of disembarking suddenly an armed force on the British coast, England would collect a fleet of war-ateamers of equal force at least, to protect her coast. In the event of the French fleet being defeated, or forced to retire, after landing the French Military force, that force would be assailed by a far superior national force, and compelled to surrender at discretion.

In the late war in Great Britain there was a regular force of about 50,000 men there were 75,000 regular Militia, who were almost argood as the regular troops; and therewere 200,000 Local Militia, who, in the event of ... an invasion of our coests being seriously meditated, could have been made telerably erviceable by a few months of extra craining. Besides the above-mentioned forces, we had opwards of half a million of volunteers, of whom, perhaps, 150,000 would have been moveable, and equal to come service. The wallike spirit of the British nation is an fervent now to the full, as it was thirty years ago. In the event of was the notion of a French invasion would again present to France the aspect of the British land bristling with bayonets. Some mischief might be done by an invaling force of 30,000 men; but in the space of a fortnight, the whole of them would find their way into the English prisons.

The Prince de Joinville's good wishes, however, ought not to be overlooked. The British Government should lose so time in improving the fortifications at Plymouth, Pembroke, and Sheerness. The Militia in the markime counties should be embodied and disciplined. The fortifications at Gosport should be improved by substituting a brick-facing for the grass bastious, the corners of which may be ascended with case by anybody under fifty years of age. Steam-feigates, with a smaller supply of coals, and powerful batteries of 65-pounders, should be constructed as a coast-guard; and the coast batteries should be furnished with some of the 56-pounders which decorate the Victoria Battery at Gibraltar, and which carry about two miles and a half. England expects the British Ministers to do their duty.

The aspect of affairs in America indicates an intention, at no distant period, of irritating England into a war. The annexation of Texas, and the eneroschments on the Oregon Territory, would, of themselves, be fair grounds for war with America; but it is not our policy to make war without the most argent necessity. This policy is so Javious to every Nation with which we have intercourse, that our policy is by some mistaken, and their vanity leads them to imagine that England only bears rudeness because she is unable to resist it.

The world is not blind to the difficulty Ireland presents in case of a war; and of all the secret enemies of Great Britain no one sees this difficulty more gladly than America. Hence comes the hostile tone of late heard in that country; and we feel confident that the recent treaty for adding Texas to the United States would never have been heard of, were not the hope strong that England would not resent this outrage, from fear of finding herself engaged in a war which might force on her a suinous concession of a Reprai of the Union. We can, however, assure America that she would be the only great sufferer in the event of a war. She has a sea-coast exposed to our numerous Navy, and steam has rendered her cities and towns open to attack when she would least expect it. One short year would decide a war with America, by the ruln of her trade, the capture of her Navy, and the sacking of her towns. The most probable consequence would be a separation of the Northern and Southern States, and the first step taken from Demogratic to Monarchical Government.

The Military Force in Canada has been greatly reduced, and we regret it; but we know that the reduction was absolutely necessary to enable Government to meet the dangers in Ireland. An accumulated force is now in the United Kingdom; and though it could ill be spared till Ireland becomes more rational on the subject of Repeal, we can safely assert, that, with the Yeomen of England, the Pensioners of the United Kingdom, and our Militia in arms, we may defy America. Of our Naval superiority a doubt is not to be expressed—our object was to show that Ireland would not so absorb our Army as not to leave thirty thousand men available for, war.

WE regret that the Secretary, At-War has not a seat in the Cabinet. It is true that the Duke of Wellington is there to afford full information whenever required; but there are matters connected with finance and detail, with which even the Duke of Wellington cannot be quite familiar, though on all other matters his information is exact and extensive. The Army demands from the Secretary-at-Wer an enlarged mind, strict justice, and a liberal construction of a Spartan sode of laws.

In Lord Howick and in Sir Heavy Hardings the Army had few fashs to find, and we believe we may safely exert, that if Sir T. Freemantle only follows the course pursued by his two prodecessors, he will give nearly general satisfaction to the Army.

Sir Henry Hardinge took leave of the War-Office this week, previously introducing, with great kindness, the Chiefs of the Department, individually, to Sir Thomas Freemantle, thus evincing, to the last, the arbenity and coldierlike feeling that have idiatinguished his official career.

Triums is, in truth, something in the conduct while poor live hardly—more so, perhaps, than they ought or noble, honourable, and learned persons, who are kind enough to meet together nightly, at Westminster, for our and robust. They are, in the main, happy and contented benefit, of which it is not enough to say that it is edifying—it is delightful—exhibitating! When we think of the mingled wisdom and benevolence of their proceedings, we almost axclaim, in the words of the lyric, "The world is good, and the people are good, and we are all good fellows together." Shakepeare makes his Prince Henry say of the frightened Falstaff, "Were't not for laughing, I should pity him." To be actions: somewhat to reverse the sentiment—were it not for pitying a nation so governed, we should laugh very heartily at the sayings and doings of the sage members of both Houses of Parliament.

The high-minded and disinterested consistency of the lower of these Houses, has been recently and notoriously exhibited in the three glorious divisions on Lord Ashley's Factory Bill. We see little-hope of any material improvement in the condition of this (or any) class of the people, till foreign invasion, or domestic strife, breaks up the system, and the present state of society sltogether; but we cannot forbear adding a few remarks upon the proceedings of the House of Lords upon this question on Monday last.

Amongst that august body there is a personage who once (when there appeared little chapes of his attaining it,) little prized the bonour of a place within that House -who thought a Lord a sufficient object of ridicule, because he was a Lord; a personage who, according to his own account, at present works harder than any factory weaver; but who has, however, the consolution of a reasonably considerable pausion — solf-secured before retiring from an office of which it is said, that in leaving it, he served his country best,-sithough he himself holds, that in accepting it, he deserved reward for the disinterested sacrifice of relinquishing a smaller private source of uncertain income, to secure a larger and certain revenue from the public purse-a revenue of which the foreign and rival nation, to (which in beart he appertains, will mainly reap the benefit !--- personage possessing of talent much, though over-rated by others, and fur, far overrating himself; a daubler infmany branches of knowledge -profound in few;-of genius destitute-of judgment, or wisdom, altogether deficient ;--vain es a coquette--unsteady as a child; -- trustless alike in public and in private—the bane of any party he may work with ;-consistent alone in this, that whilst at times it pleases him to affect pity for negroes, Jews, Turks, rebels, criminalsanything, in short, distant or depraced, he unchangeably opposes any effort to contribute to the real welfare of the poorer classes of his own countrymen-a race aircady corrupted by the (to them, if not to others,) worse than useless knowledge, of which he has been an active disseminator. But especially he loathes aught that speaks of manhood. Why, we shall not pretend to say; but it should seem that to render his countrymen as conspicuous for cowardies and feebliness, as they have been the reverse, is the favourits object of his public life. The hardy rustic he hates and salumniates; but the port and puny weaver he lands; and professes to admire-the punier the better for him; for even to any relaxation of their unpervise and unwholesome toil he is a strenuous opponent.

In pursuance of this object, whilst centending on Monday last against any limitation to the weary hours of factory toil, he took occasion to assert that workmen so employed obtained better wages than others, and enjoyed the advantage of warmth; (warmth, indeed !) that their food was better; and that this warmth made it go farther. That of the sufferings of farm labourers he could draw a frightful picture : that they were scantily clothed, hardly worked, exposed to weather, and came home to badlywarmed cottages, and damp beds. Lord Winohelses denied the truth of much of this statement, and contended (justly enough) that the adventage of pure oir would counterbalance alone all the assumed advantages of the weaver; but granting it true, what then? Our farming poor live hardly-more so, perhaps, than they ought or need to do; but they grow up always hardy, generally fall

-infinitely more so than the factory man, at all events; they make far better men, and the very best of soldiers. All our most distinguished Military authorities agree in this. And is all this nothing? Is it not, on the contrary, the most important of all the considerations, whether of a statesmen or philanthropist, to rear and maintain such a population? Nor can we agree with the Marquis of Normanby, that between the condition of these two classes. of labourers there is a difficulty in getting at the facts. A knowledge of the precise degree of comfort or discomfort enjoyed by individuals may not always be easily attainable, but between the life of a factory weaver and a ploughman, the general difference is broad and clearsuply sufficient for all important purposes; so self-evident, indeed, that it is impossible to view without contempt and derision the solemn folly of governments or senators, who think it mecessary to send expensive commissions to ascertain the fact. There are some practical men in both Houses-many sportsmen; we would ask any of them whether they would think of diding a men pedestrian, or even a jockey-to train in a factory ! We would go farther, and ask may member-even the most unadulterated cockney-of oither body, whether they would select a sick-room as a place to procure an appetite for their own luxurious fare? Yet there are many sickrooms with purer sir than oun be found in any factory:

We have been feroured with the annual extract of a letter, received by the last mail from India, which may tend to place an important question in his proper light—a question which the remarks of the various Indian papers have been serving to make almost unintelligible to the public in England, who may be unable to see what all the recent disturbance has been about, and ascribe many wrong grounds of complaint:—we silude to the mutinous conduct of several of the Bengal Native Corps on being ordered on service in Scinde.

Extract from a letter dated Culcutts, 23d March last, written by an Officer of rank in India to a friend in England, relating to the mutinous conduct of a portion of the Bangal Native Troops, lately, on their being ordered to serve in Sainds:—

"Our Sepoys receive in cantonments, in Hindosten, as pay, 5 rupees 8 annas; total 7 rupees each per moneem—those who have served 16 and 20 years, 1 and 2 rupees extra.
"It is customary when troops are in the field, marching,

"It is customary when troops are in the field, marching, in camp, &c. for them to receive what is called field or extra batts; that is, 3 rupecs inspect take it rupes field on an eautonments. When tree take the field on Foreign service, that is, service aboly out of our own provinces, they are granted the Fartgenes, is addition to extra or full batts, 'ration-money,' which they receive either in money or kind, whichever is preferable.

"When our Army marched through Soinds ' en route ' to Cabul, Candahar, &co., by the Bolan Pass, in 1838, they obtained ration-money, together with the other advan-tages; and, in case of death, their heirs received family pensions. When Sir John Keane's force returned (that of Bombay) wid 'Shikarpore' and 'Sukkur,' rations were discontinued to the truops garrisoning Sukkur from Jan. 1, 1840; but they continued to receive what they were not usually outified to, in parrison, safes or fall butta. However, the 'foreign-sogrice' allowence and family pensions' ceased on the insurrection breaking out at Cabul. These allowances were restored to the 'Sukkur' Brigade, from 18t January, 1842; and when the Sciade provinces became (I cannot say 'bond Ada') our own, the extra foreign allowance and advantages were withdrawn from October, 1843, to the 'Bakkus' corps; and July, 1843, to the troops in Lower School ? still the regiments serving in 'Scinde' were so far better off than in their own provinces, in that they had lines or huts built for at the expense of Government, and received further field or full batta' of three rupers, instead of one and a half each man per meusem.

"The Sapoys say. 'I don't want field batta, when not in the field; but-being, in our opinion, serving in a foreign country, we are entitled to 'ration money,' which is about three rupees per mensem, and 'lamily pensions' to our families, in the event of dying there. 'Your next conquest or acquisition,' say they, 'may be of Bokhara, or any other distant territory; and still you will say. 'Oh, it is no longer a foreign province, it is become a part of Hindustau, but we do not understand this sort of reasoning, and cannot subscribe to its justice!' 'Jack Sepoy' is right, but his Officers should have Teally shown him how to effect his object, without subjecting himself to pains and penalties, and the State to much embar-

"Government has given a largess of six months' batta to all the Sukkur troops who have been exposed to alckness since the late occupation; also to others in Lower Scinda a great boon; and, furthermore, have declared that the troops in Science, heeldes having their buts provided for them, and drawing extra, or held batta in cantonments, henever they move out of cantonments shall draw rations but the great aim of the 'Sepoy' is the provision for his family, in the event of death, on such distant service; owever much he may resp, in a penuniary way, his family will always be drumming such into his ears—
What is the use of temporary advantage of increased pay to see, when you are gone, dead, defanot? Government should, in all its measures, calculate the consequences, and do justice to all by whom this country is and fresh provinces sequired.

Among the many attempts that have been made to improve the mode of carrying the soldier's kuspanck, we have, as yet, seen none decidedly better than the mode now adopted. Instead, however, of Officers devoting useless time to the made of slinging the pack, we would invite attention to the reduction of the weight and size of the knapsack. It is notorious that several articles of the British soldier's necessaries-ill-styled so-could be dispensed with, and the weight and size of the pack reduced. In the first place, we would do away with two pairs of linea trousers, have two pairs of socks only, two brushes instead of four or five, one towel instead of two, and abolish such articles as scissors, brass bull-boxes, &c., which, though small and light separately, yet very neullessly increase the weight and size of the pack. To reduce the weight three lbs, is a great object, and this assuredly can be done by the abolition of two pairs of linear trousers, and the articles we have suumersted, as well as by the reduction in size of the pack consequent on having less to carry. In heavy murchles order men cannot now use their arms. Let any who doubts our assertion see how men "secure arms," and, most important of all, come up to the " present " and fire. Here is a matter worthy of the best consideration of Officers.

We have reason also thelieve that, in many regiments, the men are permitted to have two red shell-jackets, two pairs of cloth trousers, and sometimes three pairs of boots, besides all sorts of odds and ends stowed away in their havresacks. As long as the packs are of the present size, we well know that the weight will not be reduced. If the Horse-Guards Authorities would only fix on the very smallest-sized knapsack capable of containing the very swallest requisite kit, they would confer on the soldier the greatest boon he has yet received. We throw out these few observations to direct attention to the needless weight carried at present by the British soldier.

We stated in our Gasette of the 4th instant, whilst referring to the deplorable destitution of the Widow of a Superintending Surgeon of the Indian Army, that we were cognizant of many cases of families brought to ruin through the misconduct of certain agency houses; and are, therefore, not surprised at the distressing appeal we now annex. We shall continue every assistance in our power to the afflicted families of Officers, until a disposition to afford redress, or rather restitution, is evinced by those who have missppropriated the funds entrusted to their kongurable quatedy.

To the Editor of the Natual and Military Constitu-Stn,-As the widow of an old Indian Officer, who has suffered equally and from the same cause with the widow of the Superintending Surgeon of Beneres, referred to in your Peper ob the 4th mat., I return you my wars thanks for your endeavour to he the notice of the public on that unprincipled conduct which has ruined many others besides myself. I for one, Sir, shell be most happy to add my signature to the Megorial to Government, so judiciously suggested by you, praying that some measures may be taken whereby the fraudulent partners of those rotten agency bouses, or, if dead, their representatives, should be made to diagorge as much as por sible the money of the bard-working exiled soldier, of the widow, and the orphan, which they are now heart-lessly squandering in the fashionable circles of the metropolis; and were I not well awars of the slothful apathy, in matters of this kind, of Indians in general, I abould indeed express my great aurprise that auch a proposition had never been thought of, or energetically carried out before, by some of the many sufferers. people who have always been taught that the term British merchant is synonymous with honour, it must be a subject of wonderment that the partners of the house which ruined the Superintending Surgeon's widow should not have come forward publicly to senist her and her distressed family. But this asyonishment must in a measure cease on a perusal of my ouse.

My husband was an Officer of the Bengul Army, and was about to bring home with him the hard-carned savings of forty years, but was dissuaded therefrom by the principal partner of an agency house, a personal friend of his, who reminded hun of the material assistance in bringing up his large family, which their higher interest to what he would get in England would afford. With confidence in this house, and suspecting nothing, my husband unfortunately left his money in their hands. and scarcely was this done when the house stopped pay-ment, and thus brought ruin upon my husbaud and his family. His death, bastened by this cruel blow, put a stop to any hopes that we might have had of retrieving our fortune; so that I am now left at an advanced age, with a grown-up family, with the bare subsistence allow-ance derived from Lord Clive's fund. As bearing on the present subject, I cannot avoid mentioning that, in a company in which I was a short time ago, there was a gentleman from India present, and on allusion being made to the proverbial bonour and bonesty of the British merchant, he immediately and significantly expressed his dissent, mying that he had been an assignee to one of the bankrupt Indian agency firms, and in that office but too well learnt how inapplicable was that term.

Chelsen, May 21.

In the report we gave last week of the Debate in the House of Commons on Sir Charles Napler's motion relative to Retirements in the Royal Navy, Sir Robert Pael

** He hoped that the House would not countenance such a pledge as was involved in the motion of this professional subject, as it was obvious that the Commissioners had considered the question wall the begrings, and had come to the determination to make no such recommendation to the Crown. He trusted that the House would not be induced to express an opinion on the motion of the Gallant Officer, different from the recommendations

From the above, we may fairly assume that Sir Robert at least considers that the opinions of the Commissioners, on points connected with the Services, should have some weight, for he appeals to their Report, as Shylonk does to his bond, and thinks he has sufficiently answered the Gallant Commodore, when he states that the measure has not been recommended by them.

As the said Report is so well thought of, we may be permitted to ask, Why the measures recommanded for the corps of Royal Marines have not been carried out? The Commissioners, after considering the subject in all its bearings, recommended that the Marine corps should be allowed to place two Field Officers on the half-pay, annually, for the purpose of accelerating promotion; consequently, if their Report is to be acted upon in preference to any suggestions brought forward by other individuals, surely the above recommendation should be carried into effect. But so far from this being the case, up to the time we are writing, Government have not given the balfpay to a single Field Officer of Marines, nor has the corps in any way benefited by that part of the recommendation,

Again, the Commissioners approved of a certain number of Officers being kept on the Retired List, yet this number is not now complete, nor has the full number allowed by the Commission been fairly granted to the

We would recommend a visit) to Chathem, the first day the Marine Battalions there are brigaded with that Garrison, and we should be glad to hear how he would like to take a corps so Officered into action, against an enemy equal in numbers, and worthy of the name of soldiers.

ALTROUGH we make it a point of duty to notice the services of all British Officers of rank who have pass from the scene of their exploits, at the same time much pleasure in noticing those who in foreign Services have distinguished themselves, and reflected credit upon their country; particularly when that foreign Service has been blended with our own, and ran tegether the same career of glary. In this estagory, then, we have to place the late Lieutenaut General Sir Thomas Stubbs, of the Portuguese Army, a name wall known to every Officer of both Services who served in the Penincula. This distinguished Officer was originally in the British 50th Regiment, and accompanied his regiment, which, with two others, were sent to Lisbon in 1797. Here Lieut, Stubbe became attached to a young Portuguese lady of many personal attractions, to whom he was subsequently married. On the circumstances becoming known to the late Queen of Portugal, she offered him a company in her service, which he accepted; and, having gone to England to dis-pose of his Commission, returned to Lisbon to fulfil his double engagement. When our troops entered that capital is 1808, they found the subject of this memoir a Lieutenant Colopel in the Portuguese Army; on the reorganisation of this force by General Bereslord, he appointed to the command of a regiment, in which he served until 1913, when he became Brigadisr, and continued his services throughout all the campaigns until the close of the operations in France in 1611, when he became Major-General. After the peace, Sir Thomas Stubbs was appointed to command the Military division in the Alemtejo. On the accession of Don Mignel to the throne, Sir Thomas Stubbs quitted Portugal and returned to England during the reign of that prince, who confiscated part of his property in his absence. When Sir Thomas returned to Portugal, Don Pedro made him Governor of Oporto, which he held for some time. Subsequent to this, about 1824, he became Lieutenant-General, and held several high situations at the Portuguese head-quarters in Lishon, where his opinions and advice were always respected and well received. There he remained until his death, which took place on the 27th of April, this year, carrying with him the regrets of all the British and Por-tuguese who enjoyed the benefit of his acquaintance. Sir Thomas Stubbs was C.B., Knight of the Order of the Tower and Sword, and Viscondé de Villa Nova de Gaio.

On Thursday, the Queen held at Court and Privy Council, at Buckingham Palace. Sir Thomas Freemantle was aworn of her Majesty's most Hon. Privy Council, and took his place at the board. Heraldie Marking Ink-Simplicity and certainty are strong recommendations to any apparatus that may be intended for general use; and, where beauty of effect is superadded, a desideratum may be considered fully supplied. An application, he said, had been made to him in hept. or Oct. for leave to have a dinner given in Trafaigar-sq. to the Greenwich pensioners. At that time the vhole area was boarded remad, and the public were shut out from the space. He afterwards received an application to permit the dinner to be postponed till 2d of April, and aubequently he received another application for its postponement to Seth inst.; but in the interval, the square had been opened to the public, and a deficiency liaving been discovered in the artiple used for a portion of the powement, he could not allow the dinner to take place, as great damage might be incurred. He also feit that great inconvenience would result from such a dinner being held in the centre of the town, and in such a public place.

FRANCE.—Vice-Admiral Lalande, an Officer, who since he had the command of the squadron in the Levant. in 1840, bud been considered the ornament of the French Navy, and had attained a popularity which Rear-Admiral Dupetit Thouars's Oceanic fame could alone have eclipsed, died on Sunday evening, in his 57th year. To the severe loss which the French Navy has sustained by the death of Vice-Admiral Lalande, all the Journals mournfully advert.

The following is from the Santinelle de l'Armée : "Morals are nearly on a level with what they were under the regime of the Œil de Rouf, except that vice is now less elegant, and more hypocritical. In the same manner as during the period of La Pompadour and Dubarry, petticout influence is particularly felt in Military promotion. Certain Ministerial Cabinets are transformed into boudoirs, where more amorous intrigues are discussed than State affairs. Certain favours are made the price of the most shameful compluisances, and there is no hesitation in telling a woman that if she wishes that her friend should be promoted, she must come her-self, and alone, to remind the protector. Sweden .- Prince Gustavus of Wass, a General in the Austrian Army, who lost his right of succession to the Swedish throne in consequence of his father's abdication subsequent to the revolution of 1809, forwarded to the Cakingta of the Five Great Powers a kind of manifesto or protest on the occasion of King Oscar's recent accession to the throne of Sweden. The noble manner in which his present Majesty has replied to the first manifestations of his antegonist's pretensions, shows the firm confidence which he places in the people over whom he is called to reign, and the consciousness of his power to aunihilate any enemy who might attempt to oppose him. The proclamation to which we allude is in the following

"We, lacar, by the grace of God, King of Swedon, of Norway, of the Gotha and Winds, make hereby known—That the circumstances which occasioned the law of Dec. 10, 1819, prohibiting all intercouse and communication between the late King Goutavus Adolphus, the late Queen, and all her children, with Swedish subjects, having much changed, and more particularly a perfect national tranquillity of nearly one-third of a century's duration, together with an evident affection of the people for the new order of things, having impressed the east of approbation by the people on the events of 1809-1810, and the new auccession to the throne subsequent to these events, we have now, convinced of this devotion of our people and their affection to our family, of which we have so many proofs, felt ourselves called upon to manifest our unlimited confidence by annuling the above prohibitive law, and we, therefore, hareby annul and revoke the above mentioned law, in conformity with section 12 of the Constitutional Hill passed by the Diet, Dec. 16, 1812, which empowers the Sovereign to do so, &c. " L. II, GYLLENRAAL."

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Liout.-Gen. the Right. Hon. Sir Henry Hardinge, K.C.B., was sworn in as Governor General of India.

The heavy buggage of the new Governor-General of India will be shipped in the Great Liverpool, which departs for Alexandria on let June. The Governor-General and suite proceed and France to Marseilles, where a government steamer will be in waiting to convey them direct to Egypt, from whence they will embark at Sucz, on board the Hindostan, for Calcutte, and arrive there about 20th July. Sir Henry Hardinge will be the first Governor-Coneral who has proceeded to his government by what is called the overland route. It is a question whether Lord Ellenborough will have had time to make arrangements for his return before his successor's arrival, which will take place only a few days after Lord E. re-ceives his recall. It is calculated that Siz. Henry will have entered upon his high functions in India within little more than a couple of months from the date of his appointment—a celerity of movement which the history Indian affairs has never yet been able to record. Lord Ellenborough, it is expected, will leave Calcutta by the Bentinck, about 15th July, and arrive in England about the end of August.

On Wednesday the Court of Directors entertaine the newly-appointed Governor-General of India, Sir lienry Hardinge, K.C.B., at dinner at the London Tavern, previous to his departure for the seat of his Government in the East. About 150 sat down to dinner. The chairman of the Board of Directors presided. On his right were Sir Henry Hardinge, Governor General of India, the Dake of Wellington, Dake of Buckingham, Earl of Jersey, Earl of Haddington, Lord Stanley, Sir R. Peel, Mr. Astell, the Chancellor of the Exchaquer, Sir G. Murray, Sir James Graham, Sir T. Freemantle, Sir J. Macdonald, &c. And, on his left, the Deputy Chairman, the Lord Meyor, Duke of Buccleuch, Marquess of Camden, Earl of Lincoln, Earl of Liverpool, Earl-of Delawarr, Earl of Dalbousie, Lord G. Somerset, Lord Combermere, &c. After the usual loyal toasts—

Delaware, Earl of Dalbousie, Lord G. Somerset, Lord Combermere, &c. After the usual loyal toasts—

The Chairman said he had to propose to them the health of their distinguished and galiant guest, the Right Honourable Rif Henry Hardinge, whose public services were so well known to every one in that assembly that it was quite unnecessary for him to enising upon them (cheers). They must all have read and heard of the progress of that prolonged and girrlous struggle in which the arms of Great Britain had been so successfully engaged, and which, in its termination, had produced such sebatantial results (hear, hear). In that struggle, when the leadership of the greatest warrior of the age—the illustrions Duke; who sat healds him—led the Armisco Kingland so often to victory over the eagles of France, fiir H. Hardinge had borne a distinguished part (cheers); under that leader he had won a distinguished name, and established for himself a claim to a position in the brightest pages of history. During that struggle he had, under the tuition of his great master, acquired for almoself the highest reputation as a Military Commander. But his services did not end there; for as soon as peace had crowned those triumphs throughout Europe, his right Hon. Friend was placed in a position which enabled him to establish still greater claims upon the gratitude of his country, by sharing in the civil administration of the Government. He was called on to fill high and important offices in the Government of the country, and his condition that had been such as to add to his distinguished fame as a soldier the honour of being an emisont senstor and stateman. In those characters he had received the appronation of his Sovereign and of his country. It was on vach a man, he was proud to vay, the choice of the Court of Directors fell, when they were about to select a man to discharge the high and important duty of a Governor-General of India (loud applause); and it must be most gratifying to that galiant Office, and to all his friends, to know t when he was sworn in before the Court of Directors that morning as Governor-General, that in going out to India he had their atmost confidence in his judgment, and they were prepared to afford him the most cordial support in their power (sheers). They placed confidence no less in his firm and utidaunted aprict than in his just, and generous, and benevolent heart, which would cause him to be delighted in furthering the happiness and ameliorating the condition of the people of ludia. He (the choirman) hoped that his Right Hon. Sriend had before him a long career of valuable service in India, and that he would live to reap the reward of that career by returning home with the though of a grateful country and the bleasings of the people. He should, therefore, propose the hé, ith of their distinguished guest, "The Right Hon. Sir-Heary Hardings, K.C.B., the Governor-General of India."

He could assure them that the confidence and support of the Court of Directors was not so gratifying to him for the personal satisfaction which it must necessarily after him, as for the assurance it gave him that he would thereby be enabled to earry out his dealer to make his presents in India advantageous to tap population. His power to effect that object must be strengthened by the confidence of the Court of Directors, the confidence of the Cabinet. who were lately his colleagues—the sanction and co-operation of Her Mejesty's Government. Coningaby; or, the New Generation. By Benjamin Disraeli, M.P. 3 vols.

ALTHOUGH this notice will see the light within a few days of "Coningsby" making its appearance, it is too late for us to say that it will excite extraordinary interest and curiosity; it has already done so throughout the length and breadth of the land—if not by its own immedute and direct dissemination, at least by the university dentedly extended and repeated notices of it that have occupied the Morning Papers day after day—the Times no less than thrice during one week, and to the extent of many nights' Parliamentary debates. Such it is to be at once the leader and the exponent of "Young England"—or, as Mr. Disraeli is pleased more emphatically to phrase it, "The New Generation."

And there is no doubt that the leader is worthy of the

led, and the exposition here offered of its views moral, and, above all, political-is worthy of the party entertaining those views.

We say this in perfect good faith, and with a very strong feeling that the time is come when the purty in question, however small in number now, and hunted in its actual influence, is about to assume a very different tone, and act a very different part from what it has hitherto done; that Toryism being at an end, Whigparty or other must and will assume a new secondancy; and whenever such a crisis happens, that which has the youngest blood in its veins, and the greatest share of vigour in its thews and sinews, will be the one to take the lend-to keep it in another matter.

Leaving these weighty points to the consideration of "Young England," let us turn to this elequent, spirited, and most amusing exposition of its views, hopes, objects, and instrumente, and glance at it as what it in reality is -a novel of real life-and notably of political life. And in this point of view, authing can be more characteristic of its remarkable author—the author, let it not be forgotten, " Vivian Grey "_the most fearless, sinshing, brilliant, and personal satirs of its day, and which, up to this moment, has stood alone in the letter respect, but which has now found a rival in " Coningsby." literature there is nothing else of its kind; so unsparing in its personal satire, and, at the same time, so fearlessly pointed in its applications, as the character which figures as Mr. Rigby. That a gentlemen, so fearless and un-sparing in his own personal attacks as the one in question, and with such resistless instruments at his command, will rest quietly under the infliction, is scarcely to be expected rest quietly under the infliction, is scarcely to be apposted, and not at all to be hoped by the lovers of literary fun. Here is a scrap of the full-length portrait of Mr. Rigby:—

"Mr. Rigby was a member for one of Lord Monaouth's borougies. He was the natures of Lord Monaouth's Parliamentary influence, and the acutior of his vast estates. He was more; he was Lord Monaouth's companion when in England, his correspondent whom abroad—hardly his counsellor, for Lord Monaouth never required advise; but Mr. Rigby could instruct him in mattern of detail, which Mr. Rigby made amouning. Rigby was not a preferential man; indeed, his origin, education, early pursuits, and studies were equally obequer; het he had contrived in good time to unusers himself into Parliament, by means which no one could ever comprehend, and then set up to be a perfect man of business. The world took him at his word, for he was hold, acute, and volume, with no thought, but a good deal of decaltory information; and though destitute of all manigination and noble sestiment, was blassed with a vagorist, meadacious fancy, fruitful in small expedients, and never happing than when devising shifts for greet mean's scrapies.

"They say that all of us have one chance in this life, and so it was with Rigby. After a crangele of many years, after a long estics of the usual alternatives of small successes and small failures, after a few clurreith speeches and a good many clerricial pumphiets, with a countderable repetation indeed for pengulinedes, most of which is ever wrote, and articles in reviews to which it was whapered he had contributed, Rigby, who had alreany intrigued himself into a subordinate office, met with Lord Monmosth.

Alreany intrigues answer and a succession of the many forms of the man just the animal that Lord Monmouth wanted, or Lord Monmouth aiways tooked upon human nature with the callons eye of a jackey. He surveyed Rigby, and he determined to buy him. He bought him; with his clear head, his indefatigable industry, his anderious congue, and his ready and unsorupulous pen; with all his dates, all his lampoons, all the private memoirs, and all his political lorigues. It was a good surchase. Rigby became a great personny, and Lord Monmouth's man.

"Mr. Rigby had a classical retreat, which he esteemed a Tusculora. There, serrounded by his busts and books, he wrote his isampoons and articles, massacred a she liberal it was thought that no one could lash a woman like Rigby), cat up a rising genius, whose politics were different from his own, or scarified come suchappy wretts who had brought his claims before Paliament, proving, by garbled extracts from official correspondence that up one social refer to, that the maiocutent, instead of being a victim, was, on the construy, a defaulter. Tudqules and Tuper would back Rigby for a elashing reply against the field. Here, two, at the end of a lasty week, he found it decasionally convenient to entertain a friend or two of equivocal reputation, with whom he had become acquainfed in former days of equal brother-hoped. No une were more faithful to his early friends than Mr. Rigby, particularly if they could write a aquib."

The portraits connected with the "Young Eugland" party—the Lord Henry Sydneys, the Buckburate, the Millbanks, &c., are equally specific, but in a very different tone of colour—the rese predominating in them, though certainly not to an extravagant extent. But what shall certainly not to an extravagant extent. But what shall we say to THE characters of the novel, not its ostensible we say to Tite determine the novel, not its outerside in hero, "Coningsby," (who, to say truth, plays rather an inconspicuous and lesignificant part), but Sidonia—the Jaw Sidonia—a personage whom Mr. Disrasit evidently acts forth as the type, the beau-ideal of the Habrew race, the being who, even at present, sways the destinies of nations, and who is some time or other to change the whole character of the human race—restoring it to that Cauceaian type from which it originally emerged, and giving us at last a Jewish Millennium!—what are we to say of him? Why, simply that he is a very brilliant and amusing person, and one that will, it is much to be feared. turn the heads of the "peoples"—already not a little elevated by honours and dignities that have of late years been vouchsafed to them.

Upon the whole (for we must now quit abruptly the enticing topic), "Coningeby" is the novel of the season.

The Beauties of the Opera. Part I. In Giselle. Bogue Under the tasteful superintendence of Mr. Heath, it is impossible that a work so interesting in subject, and so exquisitely illustrated, as that of which we have the commencing "Part" before us, can fall of success. It is termed the "Beauties of the Opera,"—but, in fact, the "Part" before us is exclusively appropriated to the Bullet of La Ginello. Profixed is a lovely purtrait of that almost divine danagues, Carlotta Grial, as the heroine; the on-graving, by H. Robinson, from a drawing by Chalon... two names which form a guarantee of excellence. A portrait of this nature is to form the chief dutinguishing feature of each portion of the work. Then we have equally beautiful engravings in wood, in the vignette atyle, of incidents, aconery, coatumes, and decorations and every page of letter press (16 pages) is more or less embellahed by various-coloured arabeaque horders and ornaments, after the manner of Lockbutt's "Spaulsh Ballads." In the present instance, the letter-press involves a short biographical notice of Carlotta Grisi (who, volves a short biographical notice of Carlotta Grasi (who, it appears, was born in 1821, at Visinuda, a small, observe village in Upper Istria) with a gracefully-written story, or table, of the ballet of La Giselle. Altogether, the work is extremely benutiful; the portrait alone being worth double the entire cost of the Part. It promises to become almost as #indispensable" to the frequenters of the opera.

QUARTERMANTERS.
To the Editor of the Moont and Military Unsette.
Sta.—The Soldier's Friend, as our Right Hon. the Secretary-at-War is no justly designated by the Army, has done much good for the Service, and highly merits gratitude, particularly from those who have reaped the advantage of his benevolence; and none are more grateful than the Quartermesters of both Cavalry and Infantry regiments. There is yet more for his performance, to complete a work so generously begun, and it could not come from more acceptable hands, vis.—the appointment of a Quartermaster-Serjeant to each regiment of Cavalry.

The situation of Quartermaster being filled from amongst the meritorious Non-commissioned Officers of long standing, and of generally from 20 to 30 years' previous service, it may be fairly considered they may be somewhat worse

There is a wide difference between the Quartermesters of Infantry and Cavalry, as regards the duty they have respectively to perform; the former having the assistance of the Quartermaster-Serjeant, a Corporal, and a ploneer, from each company, and not unfrequently, in addition, a Company Serjeant. On the contrary, the Quartermaster of Cavairy has no Quartermaster-Serjeant, or other assistant. He is, according to the words of his Commission, signed by Her Majosty, "carefully and diligantly to discharge the duties of his situation by doing and performing all, and all manner of things thereunto belonging." No assistance is randered to the Quartermenter by the Troop Serjeant-Majors; were they disposed to do so, they cannot be spared from their respective troops; the Captains not only require them, but every other man, to look after the horses, and various other duties which the Troop Serjenat-Majors must perform.

The Quartermaster of Cavalry is in charge of stores and ammunition; and should he, from temporary indiaposition, be personally unable to attend the frequent issues of ammunition to Non-commissioned Officers of troops, he has no responsible person even to perform this duty, in whose hands he can place the keys of the magazine. He is obliged to perform all the writing of his depart-ment, or employ a Clerk, who, of necessity, he must pay for doing what is not his duty, for his trouble and pune

The Paymester (whose situation is a perfect sineque compared with the Quartermaster) is allowed a Paymaster Serieunt.

The Quartermaster has no responsible person to assist him in taking an account of the weight of the baggage, or in giving up barracks on marching out, and in taking up barracks on marching in...the delivery of barrackstores out and in, on these and many other, as well as periodical occasions. Assistance is indepensable in saving fuel, torage, and provisions to the troops, making our requisitions, returns, and distributions, and keeping accounts thereof. All these are most essential duties, and cannot be well performed by one individual, together with other most onerous and multifurious things which fall upon the Quartermenter. The consequence in, that irresponsible persons are occasionally called upon, by way of extra duty, whose experience is very limited, and reluctance with which it is performed, very imperfeetly or left partially undone, causes much annoyance and inconvenience both to the Quartermenter and Offizers, Non-communioued, and men, of the regiment, by which amplement mounderstandings frequently arise. In the general performance of duty, there is no connecting link between the Officer and the soldier, which, on mome occasions, would be more in place to be done by a Nun-commissional Officer, and less humiliating to the rank of a Communicated Officer.

ther Majesty's warrant, with regard to the supply of necessaries to the men, by removing it from the troop Borjeunt-Majors to the Regimental Store, cannot be effectually done without the assistance of a Quarterman-ter-Serjeant. It is believed that very few regiments have yet adopted the new system.

It is carneally hoped that our gallant and highly-respected Secretary-at-War will take it into his most favourable consideration, and cause the appointment of a Quartermanter-Serjount to each regiment of Cavalry, by having a permanent Non-Commissioned Officer at tucked to the Quartermaster's Department. It would be conferring a great boon to the Service-not only to the Cavalry Quartermaster, by placing him on an equal foo-ing with the same rank in the Infantry—but would ren-der much convenience and benefit to the regiments

Having served in the ranks and gone through the various grades, these observations are made from personal knowledge and experience.

C. will, "for the sake of argument, conseds the point." But, Sir, is there any offence man can commit against mere hussen feelings or conventional respect that should be wiped out with his blood? Yet such is the code upheld by A. C. If men would but think of themselves as they think of others, they would soon perceive what their inflated pride is worth: it is the folly of egregious self-estimation which is the parent of disputes and duciling. Private feelings should be restrained (if needful by law) for the general good; the very example of duelling being an outrage on all the correct feelings of the community, the practice should be put down by law. Is a man wrouged, let him seek redress at the law, which ought to be the same for rich and poor. Lawgivers, who begisher for the want of a nation, must legislate on the broad principles of human nature, and for the welfare of the masses, and not merely for a privileged few. It is in this spirit that Christianity legislates, and this it is which marks its divine origin, as applicable in its provisions for the whole human race in every possible position. Classes may be hardy enough to make laws for themselves, but the principle is fundamentally wrong. As it is said, there must be honour among regues, so duelling may be good among drunkards, swindlers, and " rollicking chaps, but among real gentlemen (and the Christian is the highest style of them) the levelling principle is not recessary; it decides nothing, and transforms man into a mere reptile of force—a voluntary gladiator!

Notwithstanding the reiterated vociferations of A. T'. the moral agiom laid down in my first letter against ducling stands good. Seconds as well as principals are obnoxious to it, because accords being usually friends of the duclists, participate in their feelings. And as to "every fair duel," alluded to by A. C., I reply there is no such thing as a "fair duel," that is, where the comno such thing as a "fair query tracts, where the batants are upon a par, except with muzzle to muzzle; on which terms "practised shots" (candle-sauffers) usually decline, the alternative being too levalling to afford a scientific chance of ovading consequences ("being riddecine, the alternative being too leveling to another a scientific chance of ovading consequences (" being riddled"). And let A. C. say or do what he will, he cannot whitewash duelling. "The state of public feeling" has nothing to do with the question; the duelling public pu lie forming so insignificant a minurity as to have no weight in a quention of general legislation. Are men to be called " to an explanation vitor what may not square with A. C'.'s or any man's abtions of gentility? proposition, Sir, is irrational and absurd, and however seasoned with high examples,-

"The offence is rank, it smells."

Can the duellist who has cut off a fellow mortal from all his present contexions and sympathies, and in his wiftulness consigned him to an untimely grave—can he, if he possess the common feelings of humanity, ful to feel the anguish of remorse, and thereby embitter every hour of his future existence?—just as if this fleeting life, with its inevitable evils, were not sufficient, but must be enhanced by a compliance with such fanciful and guilty laws as govern duclists. If a man is wrong, there is the greater reason to forbest towards him. It is Godthe greater reason to forbear tuwards bim. like to be above revenge, and if you are right, to be antislied that you are so, which is true magnanishity. Shall buman feelings, evanescent as the wind, give law to men, and that, too, when life and death are con-corned? It appears to me the wildest negion to say that more human opinion, ever fluctuating, shall be the rule of conduct, when a perfect and immutable rule is furnished by the Scriptures. But A. C. waives the authority of Seripture, and yet sureastically quotes it to sure his purpose. Such are the incongruities of a truckling to expediency.

Sir Robert Penl, in a late division, said he was " in a minority from the religious sense of the House;" and your correspondent A. C. finds himself much in the same predicament with the religious public; therefore is obliged to discard religion with some show of respect. With those who make Christianity a more name or profession, the Bible is a nonentity, and of course uninfluential. Thus A. C. closes with "esait" about a "bad world," and "no mercy" between man and man, and secuses another of "spiritual pride," and then re-pudiates religion to defend duelling on worldly prin-ciples! That a man should stop forward to this engrent Achilles (at Hyde-park-corner), as a rave avie, and argues-of his opinions ; but extremes often meet, and A. C. (anti Christ) may yet become P.C. (pro Christ.) In a final adicu, will be allow me to entreat him to quit the expediency school, and embrace religion in earnest, as the only thing that east govern men under all circumstances with anything like stability? As to the expediency gentry, they do not like truth, especially " the except when it will bend to their purposes. tratb. Nevertheless, Bir, neo virtus alla, sine veritatis, nee Cornelius. felicitas. ### THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY. To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

"There's simuthing rotten in the state

Stu .- You are the friend of the Services in all their branches. I see that you have brought public opinion to bear on recent cases of hardship in promotion among my Milltary brethren. Let me now draw your attention to a case among the unformate Medicus, who have rruly no friends in high places. I allude to the regent disposal of the Surgeoney of the 18th Royal Irish Regi-ment, in China. The Surgeon was killed by picates; the Senior Assistant, Mr. Cowen, was an Officer of nine years' service, eight of which spent in the tropieshad your through the whole Chinese war with the regiment, nover being one day absent -a care and fortunate exception in a regiment which has buried eighteen Officers in China. He was present at all the actions, thom the first taking of Chusan to the final storming of Ching-keung-ton, where he was close to poor Collinson when he tell; and, finally, he was the Sonior Assistant in China, and about the sixth senior of all those cast of the Cope. Add to this, that he is an excellent hard-working Officer, liked and respected by his corps, and all who know him. Well, this Officer is passed over for pro-mution in his own corps, and the Assistant-Surgeon of the Buffs is brought from the Himdays Mountains to take the step, being Mr. Coven's sentor by one year. Now, Sir, I sake on what principle is this done? It is vain to ask, by what rule is it done? The unfortunate Medical Officers are not under the fulr and open responsible rule of the Commander-in-Chief, at they carnestly desire and ought to be, but left to the inercy of one individual, whose commendations (I suppose under the shelter of being "professional," and, therefore, nobody's business), seem absolute. Dr. Stevenson cannot be promoted on the score of strict seniority, for he has two seniors, in what viz., M'Grigor chooses to call "the command;" viz., M'Grigor chooses to call "the command;" viz., M'Grigor Stewart in N. S. Wales, and Mr. Smith, 17th Reg. in Bombay; but let it be said, for the sake of argument, that the disregard of Mr. Cowen's services results from the superior claims of one year's additional service, how in that case will the promotion of Staff-Surgeon Marshall in China on the 30th August, 1842, be justified or explained? Mr. Murshall being a Staff-Assist.-Surgeon, who went out with Lord Saltoun's re-inforcement, and never passed Hong-Kong, or saw any service, was promoted in succession to Dr. French, of the 49th Reg., when there were ton Assist. Surgeons his seniors in the east, and six of them from five to six veurs his seniors!

True, he was the Senior Assistant in Clina (arrived at the end of the war), but so is Mr. Cowen how Why, then, was Mr. Marshall promoted over the heads of so many old Officers, and Mr. Cowen, with such claims, refused? And here, Sir, is what diagnats an Officer; Mr. Marshall is the relative of the Chief Examiner of Army accounts, and sumate friend of the Director-General; while Mr. Cowen is a deserving Officer, but without a friend in the War-office, and, accordingly, one is promoted, no doubt on the plea of se-niority, while on the very same plea the other is refused! / / But, putting uside this personal contrast, which might be much heightened by reference to the trial of Lieutenant-Colonel Amierson of the Cepton Hifter, in 1837;—putting aside this, I say, will the authorities shut the door of all hope on the Assistant-Surgeons, from my claim beyond that of senjority? Is the Assistant-Surgeon alone to gain nothing by undergoing toil and danger—by living for years aind the toils and risks of pestilence and fighting? Is he not to profit anything by the chances of distant and dangerous service, while his brother Subalterns, with whom he marches and tolls, profit by every casualty, and rise to rank and conclument? Surely, unless the department is indeed handed over, bound hand and toot to the caprice and whim of an autubent, the Millberg authorities will never saeathen a doc-time so pregnant with the worst consequences to the zeal and energy which a med cal Officer, more than any other, especially needs. The poor lellow has often to toll alone manning the dead and dying; left to his own relightened day, the middle of the ninetzenth century, as a sources, and growing wears and desponding from seeing voluntary advocate of this barbarous and wicked practice, death in its most appalling form raging found him, and stamps him, however protected under the eyes of the finding all his efforts valu. The Military Officer, again, has comrades to obter him; his path is plain, active ex-ertion keeps up his spirits, and the certainty of promotion gilds the distant prospect of service, bow arflutane

In the same Gauette, I believe, that robs Mr. Cowen of the well-deserved Surgeoncy of the regiment he has gone through so many hard-ships with, the Adjutant of it, a Lieutenant of 1835, (while Mr. Cowen is an Assistant-Surgeon of 1835,) gets, without purchase, the company of an Officer ratifing on full pay. How great the contrast between the feelings of the two Officers reading the Gazette !- the one, exulting and grateful, nerved with fresh energy and seal, ready and willing for any service, however arduous; the other, disgusted and sponding, sees himself for ever separated from the regittent he has been so long attached to, deprived of his sair reward, and reflects that by all his labours and suffair reward, and reneess tues ... This is what makes a ferings his has gailted nothing. This is what makes a man what is called "a hard bargain to the Queen;" and, A Thortoal Exila.

West Indies, March 20.

Five new HB.'s carry on our Parliamentary and political history in his own manner. "A Lesson in Klephant-riding," the animal conclams to receive another rider, Sir H. Hardinge, lifted up by Sir R. Peel, whilst Lord Ellenborough, comforted by Brougham, and the Duke threatening the sinister-looking-dephant for his tricks, appear on the other side, the ex-Governor "bruised "The Happy Family," Lord Ashley, Lord Sandon, Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Duncombe, Lord J. Russell, and others, as the birds and beats in the cage at Trafalgarsquare. A very grave and creatfallon-looking owl presides over the company looking villanously like Lord Ashley. A hawk, looking rather as if he could not belp it. and a kitten and a rabbit, the most active of the party (the three animals bearing the blink respectively of Lord Sandon, Sir T. Acland, and Mr. C. Buller), are gathered round the owl as his most prominent supporters. A very good-humoured cat, with face averted from the principal figure, has got Sir Robert Inglis's headfupon houlders, and is taking very great care of three rather forlogn-looking rats, which in the very likeness of Lords Howick, Palmerston, and John Russell, are peeping out from beneath the uncongenial shelter which they have chosen. I'. Duncombe, as a most felicitous magple, sits and chatters on the cat's head; and last and lessifcomes pour little Peter Borthwick, in the guise off a cock-sparrow. "Hercules, assisted by Iolas, attacking the flydra." The Duke is the here, to whose club additional weight is given by the inscription upon it of his late celebrated charge of gross indiscretion against the four-and twenty sovereigns of Leadenhall-street. Lord Brougham enacta the obsequious follower, armed with a red-hot poker for the purpose of applying the actual cautery a favourite amusement of his -to the amputated heads of the Indian monster. His well-known instinct of selfpreservation is slyly shown by making him keep carefully behind his fighting companion; he has not even the courage of the Jackal in providing prey for the modern Lion-he allows the noble animal to seek out objects for destruction, and then sneaks in to gratify his tuste by torturing them in safety. We need not add that the India directors, conjointly, compose the Hydra—that their heads are his—that their tail hears the significant word "Nepotism" the leterrime cause of all the hubbub; and that the locus in quo is the portion of the Company's House in the City. All the faces are portraits; that of Mr. Hogg is very good, and in the Duke and his man Friday, "H. B." uever fails.

Peculiar Advantages of the Institution.
Credit given for half the amount of the first five Annual Premiums, by which means Ansurances may be effected with the least possible present nuttay, and after payment of the arreare, the Policy holder will become entitled to participate in the entire profit of this institution, precisely in the sams manner as it he usual way.

Thus, for example—a person in the twenty-fifth year of his arc.

profit of this institution, and the fremiums in advance in the had paid the whole amount of his Premiums in advance in the usual way.

Thus, for example—a person in the twenty-fifth year of his age, instead of paying 2f. 6s. per annum for an Assurance of 10%, would be required to pay 1f. 8s. only during the first five years, when, on payment of the arrears of Premium, amounting to 8f. 18s., his share of the Profits would be such as to reduce his future Annual Premiums to very little more than the half Promium of 1f. 8s. originally paid by him. The Gazar Barrain is the only Matual Assurance Society in which this very great accommodation is given to the Assured.

Credit allowed for the whole of the first five Annual Premiums, on satisfactory security being given for the payment of the same at the expiration of five years.

All the profits of the Institution divided annually emong the Policy holders who stall have paid five Annual Premiums.

Full particulars are detailed in the Prospectur, which, with every regulate information, may be obtained by application to A. R. Laving, Managing Birector.

OPENIORS OF THE PARAS.

From "The Times."

"The announcement of a new novel by the able author of 'Vivian Grey' would be sufficient to awaken the eager expectations of those who love heely sacrices of success, and brilliant descriptions of 'feast and ball,' but Coningdy will activate additional and graver interest, from the prevalent idea that he exposured the opinions of 'Young England.' The story will be found replete with interest."

"The Morning Chronicle."

"We may augur for this book a very extensive popularity. It is quite as cursons as it a clever."

"The Morning Post."

"This book is tuil of life, apirit, and accurate portraiture. As a painter of fashonable life, we know no one more sut full than Mr. Disraell. Nover did satire dissect with a more polished knife—nover were the ulcable of political and fashionable life is too cutting, too true, to be passed over unbeeded. It must be read by all. The romantic interest of the story is likewise maintained with consummate skill."

"This is to every respect a very fine and remarkable novel. It is a very successful attempt to intertwine the political feelings of the day with the interest and pint of a novat."

"This work is destined for extensive popularity. It is a production of much leient—bitterity personal, satisfical, political, and is besides the manifesto of 'Young England.'"

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY, AND THE BRITISH ARMY AND NAVY.

J. KOHLER'S NEW PATENT LEVER INSTRUMENTS.

J. KOHLER NEW PATERT LEVER INSTRUMENTE.

J. KOHLER having brought to perfection and obtained Her Mejesty's Letters Patent for the above invention, which he has applied to the CORNOPEAN, TRUMPER, CORNETTO, TROMBONES, and PRENCH HORNS, he can now with great considering, and an experience of Pive Years, in bringing the action to its present state of perfection, recommend them to Her Majesty's Army and Navy, and all Professors and Amstears.

The advantages that this Patent gives to these Instruments are:

All the Topes and Semitones produced by the Patent Lever are quite as perfect so the Natural Notes on the Instrument.

2. The intervals in the Diaronic and Chausanic Scales are purfect, the compass greater, and the most rapid and difficult passages may be performed with a precision, freedom, and fulness of tone, and comparative case to the performer.

S. Combinations in harmony, which never before could be performed at all by any Brass Instruments, may now be executed with perfect case, and Too or Twelve lowtruments on this principle, can produce a more rich and sonorcus effect than Twenty four could do on the old principles. The harshness of tone in the former Brass Instruments is entirely done away with, and a Set of these Instruments beard together, produces military and harmonious effects never before heard.

There Instruments are now in use in Har Mainsty's Private Band, Piper Live Quands, Royal Borra Guands, Granadies Guands, Functions Guands, &c.

She will embark 100 Supernamerary Marines this afternoon, and drop down to St. Helens at day light, and go to sea in the course of to-morrow. The flag of Adm. The royal yacht, Victoria and Albers, in in dock to have her new boilers fitted, and complete for ees; but there appears two months' work to perform; her crew are in the Nautilus, cruising in the Chennel, to relieve the homeward-bound trade. The King of Saxony is expected in the Dockyard this evenand will sojourn for the night at the Admiralty, or the Government House, visit the yards and other places to-morrow, and then cross to Ryde. Milroup Haven, Moy 29.—(From our our Correspondent.)—The Adventure, Navai transport, arrived at this port on the 27th inst. from Woolwish. Same day the Castel, lighter, from Devonport Dockyard. The Conturion will be undocked on the 31st; the tides did not rise sufficiently high last spring to perselt its being accomplished. Mr. Laws, Clerk of the Check, west on public leave from Pambroke on the 23th inst. With regard to the appointment of Capt. Moulds to Chatham, I fear the remarks in relation to the removals of dockyard Officers, which appeared in my last communication, do not seem sufficiently clear. What I intended anying was that by a General Order of the Board of Admiralty, the Officers and Clerks in the different dockyards have been informed that they are not to consider themselves as attached to any particular one, but to hold themselves in readiness for removal to any other where their services may be required.

"ALBERT!" — (From a Correspondent.)—From your just advocacy of the claims of the United Service, and seeing in your Paper of last week that Lieut. Camberland is appointed to H. M.'s st, Albert, on the coest of Africa, it is to be hoped that the Officer now Acting-Lieutenant in command of ber, Mr. Cockoraft, will be promoted, having lately dictinguished himself (the particulars mantioned in your Paper three weeks since), and which, from later accounts, have ended with credit to himself; he has likewise on various occasions distinguished himself whilst he has been in command of Albert (nearly two years). He was to have been superceded by Lieut. Woodrufe, who has invalided, whom Mr. Cockoraft was re-ampointed.

has been in command of Albert (marry two years). He was to have been supercaded by Lieut. Woodrufe, who has invalided, when Mr. Cockoraft was re-appointed.

Great credit is due to Admiral Sir George Cockbura for the judgment he has evinced in the classification of the steam Navy of this sountry, which is now divided into steam frighten, steam sleeps-of-war, steam gan-vessels, and steam tenders, tugs, Sm., for herbour and count service. The steam frighten are divided into two classes, and are commanded by Post-Copteins. There are only four frighten of the first class, Posseleys, Retribution, Terrible, and Avenger—the three last are building. All these vessels are to have engined of from 650 to 600 horse-power. The steam steeps-of-war are divided into four classes, and are all to be sommanded by Commanders. The steam gun-vessels are to be sommanded by Liebs-tensate.

Mr. Turner, of Pembroke Deskyard, has been appointed the Master Builder of the Deskyard at Bombsy, vice Leire, who is appointed to Pembroke yard. By letters just received from Callac, dated Jan. 28, we learn that there had been a fair trial of sailing between the Vindictive and the American frigates, United States and Constellation. The following are the particulars of the circumstance:—On Saturday, Jan. 20, the Constel-lation, of 46 guns, Commodore Kearney, and the United States, of 52 guns, Capt. Armstrong, (Commodore Jones having on that day struck his broad pendant to return to America as a passenger in the Constellation), weighed their anchors at about 5 o'clock, the Vindictive being under easy sell about a mile distant. The moment the American frigates cast, the Vindictive backed her maintopsail to allow them to close. At about 5 30m, the Constellation bore up within hail, when the Vendictive Constellation bore up within man, when the how under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses; both ships being now under filled, and set her courses in the filled of th every sail, by the wind, going about 5 knots. dent did not set her courses until some time after the Vin-dictive did, but kept astern of the Constellation until her signal was made to make all sail. At 6 20m. the Findie tire bad headed both the American frigates about a mile, when, passing close to the north point of San Lorenzo, the wind baffled, upon which the Finductive hauled up her courses and backed her main-topsail, to allow the Americans to come up, so as to have a fair start when the bronze again became steady. As each ship approached San Lorenzo the wind failed them; but the United States. and then the Constellation, both got the breeze before the l'indictive, from being about a mile to the southward of her. At it the American frigates bore from the l'indictive thus, as per Log. - United States, S. by W. about 3 miles; Constellation, SSE, about 14 mile; wind, SE, to SEEE.; ships' heads, SSW. At 9 the Vindictive passed close to beward of the Constellation, and at 10 she was out of sight astern. At 11, l'indictive passed close to lesward of the United States. At daylight (about 4 40m., A.M.) of the 21st, the Constellation could not at first be seen at all from the l'indictive, but at 5 she was discovered more than seven yards down about a point on the lee-quarter, bearing about N. by E.; the United States, at daylight, bore about NE&E., by compass 3 to 4 miles, being about two points on the l'indictive's weather quarter. At 5 20m, she bore N.E. from 4 to 5 miles, and the Vindictive was propering to tack, to weather her, which she avidently would have done, as is stated by every one, full two miles, when the United States hauled her mainsail up, and bore up to join the Constellation, thus evidently acknowledging to have been beaten thus much, and which her Officers have since freely confessed. The dist run from 8 P.M. to 5 20m. A.M. was 65 miles. When the wind freshened at all, and the Vindictive began to go above 7 knots, her advantage over the Americans increased; and the belief of all her Officers is, that in a top-gallant breeze, and still more so in a double-realed top-sail breeze, the Vindictive's appeariority would have come the more evident. All the ships during this match carried their royals, and with all their reas out. In returning to Calleo, under all sail, with the wind on the quarter, the Vindictive had still greater advantage over the United States, for though they did not leave the Conetellation at the name time, yet at about 8 30m. A.M., when the United States made sail back, the upper part of her hull was distinctly seen from the Vindiction's deck, whereas at noon her lower yards had dipped, and she did not anchor at Callao until about 5 F.M., hereas the Vindictive reached anchorage at 2 30m. The Officers of the United States were astonished to find their ship so fully caten, as they had represented her to be the fastest ship beaten, as they had represented nor to be the instant only in the American Navy, and they believed the fastest in the world, having, as they said, beat the Vernon, and all the other feet ships in the Moditerranean.

H.M.S. Queen arrived at Gibraitar on the 18th May, and was ready on the 18th to take her departure for England; she only waited for an easterly wind to carry her through the Straite. The invalids from the several corps in garrison have embarked on board the Queen to proceed to England for the benefit of their bealth.

Garrison is healthy.

H.M.S. Tremendous, 72, ordered to be rance'd, was launched in 1783, consequently she has been built upwards of 60 years. She formed one of Lord Howe's fleet in the action of the lat of June, 1794.

Sin,—As one who really wishes well to both Services,
I have observed with much regret the little heart-burnings and jealousles which have, of late years, sprung up in the Royal Marines against their brothren of the Royal Artillery. For my own part I see no analogy whatever between the two Services—the system of the two corps is the system of the two corps is out. The Royal Artillery conof necessity totally different. The Royal Artillery consists of a Horse Brigade and nine battalions, to each of which there is a Colonel-Commandant, as in the regiments of the Line, one of whom is employed as Commandant of the garrison of Woolwich, but the others are no more "retired" Officers than are those Generals who have regiments and are not employed on the Staff of the Army; and as to the Colonels of Artillery, they are on the list of effective Officers, and are open to employment when required-indeed the greater part of them are employed in altuations much to their own credit and the benefit of the Service to which they belong. The Lieut.-Colonels of Artillery are scattered over the face of the globe, in commanda much too important for Officers of an inferior rank to hold, for it is not by the number of companies at any particular station that the importance and responsibility of an Artillary command is to be measured. It would seem that one of the objects of "Per Mare per Terram" is that the Marines should have an equal number of "Colonels-Commendant" with the Artillery; that is, I presume, to have the corps divided into nice battalions instead of four "Divisions," as at present; but where is the tenth to come from? There being no corps of Horse Marines, no part of that service would be placed on the same footing as to "pay, &c.," with the Horse Brigade of Artillery; consequently the claim for ten Colonels-Commandant must fall to the ground! With regard to the "lecture upon Hesse," and that the Royal Artillery " is as much a subordinate corps to the Army," as the Marines are to the Mary. I really think "Pen Mary nor Terram" has a smbordinate corps to the Army," as the Marines are to the Navy, I really think "Per Mare per Terress" has evershot his mark, and by no means thoroughly considered his subject. The Master-General of the Ordannos is the "head" of the corps attached to that branch of the Army; but even were they placed under the "Horse Guarde," as your correspondent says "It ought to be, if the public good is considered," I am very certain that the Officers of Artillery, and Engineers, would have no reason to fear that any of their "advantagee," (or rather instituted derress.) would be in the alightest derress. supposed advantages,) would be in the slighte supported sevantages,) would be in the slightest degree endangared; on the centrary, in a Military point of view, they might be benefited by it. His late Reyal Highness the Duire of York was most desirous to obtain the Ordennes Corps, when Commander-in-Chief, but at that time it was considered as a combination of too much patronage even for him; it is not therefore, very likely that any other Commander-in-Chief should obtain that which was withhold from the King's son | sittiough " Per More per Torran" sesses " to wish he may got it."

Mare per Torram" stems " to wish he may go As to the differences between your two corresp One of last War, and " Per Mare per Torram," they may settle the matter between themselves; and although the settle the matter between themselves; and although the charge of a "want of monkery of purpose" is a prestry strong one ! still, I dare say, it will be well meet, and "Per Mere per Terrem" may yet find that he is only "biting against a file," for there are some very tough "Old Files" among the "Gunners," he may rely upon it. I shall now take the litherty, and it is with all due courtesy I do so, to recommend "Per Mere per Terrem" to be the Artillers siene "No matter when monadem" it. I shall now team two murry, and manufactured it courtesy I do so, to recommend "Per Mere per Terrem" to let the Artillery slone, "Ne sutor ultre erupidum"——let him confine himself to that which he ought best to let him common himsen; we can we want you went to the per-understand, what would really conduce most to the per-manent benefit of his own gallant service 1 and I certainly think that the Royal Marines are most justly entitled to a Retired List upon a liberal and extended scale; and which should be opened to them at ones, as es to bring forward their Junior and most effective Officers. Neither is there any just reason why the "pay, &a.," of their Establishment, should not be put on the same feeting as the rest of the Army; and this would perhaps satisfy "Per Mars per Terrans," and he might cause to draw empreciations with the same feeting the same that the same feeting the same than the same feeting the same than the same than the same transfer. parisons which will never stand the test of investiga-tion, otherwise we shall be tempted to exclaim, "Modus aut finis nullus—Cupiditatem menem inveniri." Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:

"The Court Martial having duly considered the evidence given in apport of the presecution against the prisoner Gamer and Driver Michael Savelle, as also what he has stated in his defence, is of opinion that the prisoner is guilty of both charges. Srn,—In your Paper of the 18th instant, I pointed out that the writer of the letter signed, ? One of the Old Two Fours," had mistaken the number (22) on one of the two Salamanca Bagles, for the number of the regiment by which he thought it was captured; and I also committed a great error in stating that the other Eagle was mithout a head, whereas I should have said, without a number.

Sam -- It appears from a letter in the Navul and Militory Gazette of the 13th inst., signed "One of last War, that the writer is exceedingly nettled, because M. E. complained of the gross injustice of not alluming Officers of the Royal Marines the same advantages as Officers of the Royal Artillery, with regard to annual retirements; for he says, that notil the Unstituehed Major-Generals of Artiliny he allowed to retire upon 700f, a year, as the Com-mandants of Marines do, the Marines must allow the residency as to reason of complaint to the Ordnance corps. Now, as there is nothing like a plain unvariated state-ment, let us see who really have the most cause to com-plain—the Artillery or the Marisus? The Artillery, with some three thousand men less than the Marines, have 10

Colonels Commandants, 20 Colonels, and 44 Lieut.-Colonels on the Serving List—in all 74 Field Officere-The Marines have 4 Commandants, 5 Colonels Second Commandants, and 14 Lieut. Colonels—in all only 23 Fig. D. Oppicans, making the sumber of 51 in favour of the Artillery. The Commandant of Artillery has 21, 14z. 9 jd. per day, the Commandant of Marines only 11, 18z. 6d. per day. After this, I think that One of last War should lie dormant till another war breaks out, as perchance he The Commandant of Artillery has 2!, 14s. mant till another war breaks out, as perchance he might then recover his lost memory.

It does not follow, because the Marines were so unjustly treated by the "Commission," and the Artillery so Associately, that the former should not express their Associations, that the former should not express their grievances. Give the Marines deadle the humber of Field Officers—allow 4 Field Officers and 4 Ceptains to retire on full-pay every year (as is the once in the Artil-lery)...do not mulot the Captains of their thirteen-pence per day when ambarked—and I will venture to affirm, no more complaints would be heard.

It is now known that the three vacancies on the Retired List of Commandants are to be filled up immediately, after keeping them open for years, to the injury of those old veterans who stand first for promotion. But I would respectfully ask of the "powers that be," what will the mere filling up of these three vacancies avail the corps at large? Let us turn to the list of Captains, and see what a frightful picture it presents; out of sinety-sine, it will be found that Eight T-voun have served as follows:

---3, 41 years; 10, 40 years; 11, 39 years; 8, 38 years 3, 37 years; 9, 36 years; 18, 35 years; 3, 34 years; 7, 33 years; 9, 32 years; 5, 31 years; 3, 30 years; and, be it remembered, that all these are from 50 to 60 years of age; consequently, very many can hever advance higher in rank. Why not then offer them the reticement? To a stranger it would appear extraordinary that the Marines, proverbial for their loyalty and bravery, should not be allowed to participate in the good things awarded to other corps...that they should be kept in the background. The reacon is easy of solution—they possess no parliamentary interest. A retirement, nothing short of from thirty to forly Officers, can put the corps upon that footing it ought to be (the fact can no longer be concealed); and surely if a respectful representation, detailing the exact situation of the Officers, were made to the proper quarter, it would meet with attention.—I have the bonour to remain, &c.

. Right Wing, Quebec. By an order dated Horse Guards, May 20, 1844, the county to the Infantry recruit is 41. instead of 31. 17s. 6d.; but the 2s. 6d. is taken from the party enlisting, who will in future, on intermediate approval, receive is. instead of 7s. tid. The recruits to be 5 feet 63 inches, at least, if between 18 and 25; and 5 feet 6 lackes if under 18 years.

The troops which arrived in Guernecy last week are

The depots are commanded by the under-mentioned officers:—23d, Capt. Seymour; 42d, Capt. Gathrie; 97th, Capt. McCaskili; Rifle Brigade, 2d Batt., Capt. Glegg.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR EDWARD GIRBS, K.C.B.—The publication, in a Jersey paper, of a very intemperate letter, addressed by Mr. C. C. Wilson to His Excellency the Lieut.-Governor has given rise to a public meeting, and the following address to that much esteemed and Lett do., Barbedow.

The origin of the epistle arose out of a woman heing sentenced to a month's imprisonment for receiving series, goods. Her counsel, Mr. Wilson, considered the period to be a lunar, and not a calendar month. His Excellency, on being applied to, referred the matter to the Home Secretary, and thereby gave rise to the most unjustifiable attack on the part of Mr. Wilson. The common law of Jersey, originating from, and agreeing in many instances with that of France, takes for granted that, both in civil and cristinal procedures, a smooth is a period of their date. In Burland, on the contrast relies attacks. days. In England, on the contrary, unless expressly attated otherwise, the month, in legal matters, is understood to be lunar and not calendar—that is to say, turniya eight and not thirty days. Mr. Wilson has made a very proper applicate to Sir Edward.

Doctor John Prederic Clarke, P.M.O., of this island. has been premoted to the highest rank in the medical department of the Army—Inspector-General—and is ordered to proceed to India to take charge of the medical service there. The Inspector-General will embark by the earliest opportunity. SING-After all that has been written against deelling, and after the disapprobation of the practice recently promulgated in Her Majesty's name by the First Lord of the Admiralty and the Secretary-b-Wer, it might be considered superfinent to revert to be painful a susject; but it appears to me that some of the remarks of your correspondent signing himself." He blames these as inconsistent "who ground their arguments" against deciting "on the sin of deliberately going out to take the life of sucher, although that other may have wounded your headour and destroyed your peace," yet "do not kentists to destroy, for payment, thousands of their fellow-stealures who never offended them." I maintain that we lee not inconsistent; we consider that He who commanded us to live our enemies—to do good to these who help us, and to turn the left check to him who smiles us on the, right, never forbade the nue of arms in public warfus), but honoured the good teasturies, whose servant he headed, by destaring that he had not found such faith as his in Jarual; and was pleased to select Cornelius, another Rodam officer, as the first convert among the Gentiles. The defender of his committy obeys its laws—the duellist Violates them; and even in the prospect of immediate disth madly sets at noight the commands and threatenings of the Almighty, rather Desting is far less common in England then in France or Germany; but I have yet to learn that modest women and inoffensive men are mays liable to inselt among us than among our neighbours, or that Englishmen are less civilized and humans in the hineteenth captury than they were when every gentleman wore a sword, and had it on every trilling provocation. But the whole subject is so ably treated in the small pumphlet published by the Association for the Suppression of Duelling (a publication which deserves a wider circulation), that I will treamme no further upon your space, account to express my woulder that "One who has Fought" about derive from the instance of David killing Golfsch in single fight (new "unfairy" I denot see), or the shaughter of one girst by another with a spear like a warver's heam, my Mrightural senetion for the sinful and bischievous practice of duelting.—I have, fee "ME MAVAL SERVICE.

It is anything hat gratifying to our pride, that we, the first Maritime nation in the world, should be obliged to take example from a nation every way infector to us in Naval matters; but such must be the case if our ships are not kept at sea sufficiently to give us practice, and when the Josy-Huge system of pounds, thillings, and pence is more thought of than the efficiency of our Officers.

Perhaps your Correspondent is not aware that even the smallest spar or bunch of yarns and its price are to be accounted for or returned to the authorities. A ship, therefore, that remains in barbour, and whose only wear and tear is the Op-gallant-yard rope, is a model of economy—a cruiding, hard-working vessel, the opposite; so the hoards of penisies now saving may be made a sinking fund, to meet the thousands of pounds to be lost when our unpractised Officers are again called upon to act, as the lewering storm hanging over us, in the form of our old antagonists, breaks. Sir George Cockbarn mey rise in the house and ex-Sir George Cockturn may rise in the boute and ex-claim with irony, he pittes the nerves of Officers who cannot alsep in their beds; and may state to admiring county members, that our Navy was never more efficient than at present. This sounds well, and his high au-thority may be repeated in the Chamber of Deputies, to atimulate young France; but assertions are one thingfacts, another; and, giving the Bervice every credit for zeal and bravery, equal to that displayed in the most glorious epochs of our Naval history. I sesent that it is not equal in ability, as sallors, to what it was. And why is this? Is it that we have deteriorated? Has the long peace acted as a Capus to our litherto invulnerable Navy? No I the fault is, a want of moral courage in those who have the Naval affairs of the country in their hands—afraid to call on the impoverished nation for money to support her right arm! They leave her Offimoney to support ner right arm! They leave har Om-carn to pace the deek, in the lone night watch, at anchor, gaining as mosh experience as the sentry on the gang-way. Did a man ever play cricket, billiards, or fence, about, and walk well, without practice? How then ma-monuver, reef, furl, dar, without it? We may have had heaven, burn ministers, and, methants, no where so fremonven-burn ministers, and, perhaps, no-where so frequently as at the Admiralty, but I doubt whether there was ever-such a thing as a heaven-born sailor. All that our present Board seems to do, is attempting to square our present board seems to do, is accompling to square the old circulars, parronising the teilors and gold-lace makers, and cutting down cooled hats and old 74's. Realty, I think, "old fighting Charley" should give notice of a motion to inquire why Naval Cadets have not had an addition to their uniform? Perhaps from their age he may propose unfledged wings, similar to those of the Marylebone firemen. But, swiously, it is a ead thing to see so little attention paid to essentiale; and I much fear, should "Wes Johnsie" take command of the Channel fleet, he will find them more divided in order of seiting than over the club-bed ministry in which the holated his free-trade flag. Why should not the admirable example be followed, which is set by the Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, of sending the youngsters to see in the tenders, Sec.? and why should we not have a greater part of our revenue vessele brige instead of cut ters? They would be a nursery for young Officers, and become their am efficient Count Guard. Let the affort service of the Preventive be slogether under the conservice of the Preventive be stogether under the control of the Admiralty, let the men and Officers belong to their proper head, and not be obliged to have a Custom-beate order, to hold a court of inquiry on one of H.M. a Officers, with a pendent fixing? The shares of princemency, made in captures of smagglers, might be divided as in all other cases, with the exception of giving the Flag and Greenwich shares to the Custom-house. Thus would be formed a macquito equadron, at all times roundy to act, and in which every Cates should be obliged to saves two years, before gateg into a larger vessel. to serve two years, before gateg into a larger vessel. But, at present, Naval affairs have become architectural, and when other improvements are discussed, it is to the old song of "The Pilot," made into a trie, "Fighting Charley" taking the 1st part, exclaims to Sie Robert, sears of a portion of his | " Pilot tie a feerful night," who enewers, " Go down, go down," and is followed by Sir George (a bravenra),

" Fear not, but trust in Providence." So goes on our Service; and until Maral Officers will neck other, and demonstrate to the questry that the Navy is a Service of practice, and obtain juntice for themselves, we shall gradually be falling into the retrograde, until our once splendid Navy will be nelty a metter of remembrance, and like these of Spain and Rostugal, who ence boasted the firest in the world, sink into insignificance. BARRACE ALLOWANCES TO ORDERLY-ROOM CLERKS.
To the Editor of the Nased and Military Seatest.
Str.—It was with much surprise I perseived, by a letter in last Gazatte, that there had been a movement towards the decountingness of the fuel allowance to Staff Serjeents, excepting Serjeent-Majure and Quartermenter-Serjeents. A regulation such as the above, which, without any demorit whetever attaching to this particular out any demotit whetever attaching to this particular class of fier Majeany's subjects, designs enolly to awasp away privileges of so long standing, and thus to pushed an unoffending holy of men, without hencelt of jury, demands some omnideration. Had the measure originated in the reductive policy of a Hume (who would seconomise the Army away slogether), it might have been imagined that an unequaintance with the detail of Military life had misled him; and that, were he conversant with the many inconveniences to which a softier is necessarily subject, the man would struggle against the glandeler, and his better feelings would induce him to crush the proposal between his fingers. And when its crush the proposal between his fingers. And when its pedigree may be traced to the Honnurshie Board of Ordnance, amongst whom must certainly be numbered some who know the desagrament of a suldier's bome, it connect but he a matter of asignishment, even more than of regret, that a proposition so unfavourable to and undeserved by Staff Serjeants, should be for a mamout enconraged. It may not be amiss to view its particular couraged. It may not be amine to view in particular bearings; in order to arrive at-which, we should assert ain the peculiary advantages according to these Serjeants. It is a generally contended principle that, from the responsibility of their several offices, they are entitled to a position somewhat higher than that of Platont Serjeants; but it is 'impossible to' mointain such, with the property of the period of the content of the part to the out an increase of pay. The necessity of pay to the support of position is acknowledged by the gradutions of pay of the several ranks in the Service-the Corporal over the private, the Seriesat over the Corporal, the Colour over the Platon Seriesat, &c. &c.; and this is particlly provided for in the cases of the following Staff Berjeants i-Drum-Major (as Serjeant), in his charges for Officers' letters; the Schoolmaster-Serjeant, from the school or regimental fund; the Flospital-Serjeant, in his allowance of 4d, per diem ; the Armourer-Berjeent, in what he can realise by his trade. These are perquisites additional to, independent of their pay. But the Orderly-Room Clerk and Paymaster-Serje whose labour is equally unremitting, with an equal onto their pay, except the hope of a tell-years' distant raver-alonary 6d, par diem? It becomes then at least a fair question, why they are excluded from ANY perquisites? If it be urged they do nothing else for their pay, does the Hospital-Serjeant, the Drum-Major, the Armourer-Serjeant, the Schoolmaster? It is further still less incumbert to take from them the solitory benefit they enjoy in the arriels of fuel! Rather should it be felt, enjoy in the atticle or there are sure should be machinery of that men who in fact serve to maintain the machinery of the machinery of the street worths of some attention. It is a regiment, are at least worthy of some attention. anything but eatisfactory to one whose bours of daylight and recreation are pessed in the monotonous confinament and recreation are passed in the monotone confinament of an Orderly-room, that, while his brother Stuff-Serjeants are deriving permany henefit from their avocations, he must tuit on, uncared for, neglected, while denied the liberty of a Platom Serjeant, though receiving no more pay. It is an old proverb, and not less true because quaint, that "I been pedrone for it hum servitors." buon servitore.

Resides, will not the authorities subject themselves to the satire of having taxed the poorer stacces of the Service, by discontinuing fuel to Staff-Serjeants, is order to enrich the wealthier, by adopting an issue to married Officers resident out of harracks? Surety, the intention of the public purse must be to provide for the nutural wants of the public servents; and those who wield the strings of this purse, if they are not "Open as day to switing charity," need not emulate the generosity of that now-classical character. James floor, who, at the collection above a farming racter, James Crow, who, at the collection after a charity hemon,

Our esteemed Correspondent " Ubique " has mistaken the meaning of the note in our last. It was the allecton to the remark in the N. and M. Gasette, and not the passage in the work, which we could not find. We readily comply with "Ubique's" request, and make room for the passages he has extracted, and aid a few comments. Extract from page 237 of Major-General Sir Charles Napier's "Remarks on Military Law:"—

Napier's "Remarks on Military Law:"—
"But generally speaking, the man of ancient fineage with a empty purse makes a good solder; his family history in som degree connects him from childhood with the Army. His serile ideas are associated with war, and gives his character a betthat way. But he is quite a different man from the rich honous able or lordling, who travels Europe 'to study the opsies of different Armies,' and returns, huncying himself a Military gentuat home at Potsdam, and quite abroad in the barracks! Loo at the number who never saw a shot fired, but who comman regiments, while numbers of experienced Officers pine on hal pay with the rank of Lieutenant or Captain; and was complain that we are not a Military nation! Assuredly we are not, an while this system lasts we never shall be."

In the same elevan, at page 188, Sir Charles says—

"It is our aristocracy that is not Military; our rick Officers are not Military; especially the Cavalry and the Guards—that is to say, those corps which, as far as regards their Officers, are diled by the aristocracy. All these are brave, but, generally speaking, not Military. Our Engineers, our Artillery, and the lower ranks 6' the Infantry are, both Officers and privates, is their Military spirit equal to any nation in the world."

as we have several times taken occasion to remark, far less as we have several since to account or remain, jurious known than it deserves to be, especially amongst the profession of which the writer is so distinguished a member. It ubounds in lessons of prefound wisdom, delivered in the clearest language, and it is as modestly as it is ably written; nor have we oftener met with a more amusing book. There are to be found in it many Spharacteristic and interesting aneodotes, and there is a vein of quiet humour that is very diverting, but which interferes not at all with the certous purpose of the author, who has left upon every page trace of a benevelont heart and cound intellect. Yet this is the man at whose reputation the miserable tools of party have peaked, and do still peck (witness the last Number of the Edinburgh Raview), in attributing to him ambitious and selfish motives in his actions in Scinds. His honour has, we know, during his own absence, a zealous and efficient defender, in whose hands we leave it for the present, merely remarking that a truly great, patriotic, and disinterested man is so uncommon a phenomenon, that vulgar minds can scarcely bring themselves to credit its existence, nor can they understand the possibility of actions not dictated by selfish calculation—especially if they are the actions of a contemporary. But after-ages will yet, we think, do justice to the name of Napier.

SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1844.

Tue pemphlet of the Prince de Joinville still continues to excite some attention, chiefly on account of a certain degree of mystery that hangs over the origin of the publics tion. The speculations on that point are both numerous and amusing; the Opposition and Redical papers satch at it with the hope, in which we think they will be deceived, that they have gained a friend and advocate in the King's family, who will join them in the task of pulling down the present Ministry and placing their friends in their stead. Let us take an example of the way in which this portion of the Parisian press treats the question, by giving an extract from La Patrie, which goes back to poor Queen Pomere as the original cause of this pamphlet.

Pomere as the original cause of this pamphlet.

The Prince de Joinville applauded more than any one else the conduct of Admiral Dupetit Thomars, from whom he had received a letter of 19 pages, dated Otabeits, November 9. This letter, which a Deputy who stands well at Court showed to several Members of the Chamber, detailed the powerful montives which had forced the Admiral to oblige Queen Fomere to respect the French flag. The verbal remonstrances of Lord Cowley were sufficient to obtain from M. Guizot a disavowal of our brave Admiral. It was in vain that the Prince de Joinville had endeadoured, with the letter of Admiral Dupetit Thomars in his hand, to prove to M. distort the necessity of waiting for further information respecting the events at Otabeits, before taking a step which would be a discouragement to the whole French Navy. According to M. Guizot, a powerful hyterest imposed upon France such an act of condescension towards England. The efforts of the Frince were without effect. But, when at last the Prince de Joinville learned from the mouth of M. Reine hisself all the details of the scisure of Otabeits, he was no indignant at the cowardice of M. Guizot, that he declared he would no longer serve under so diagraceful an Administration, and on the same day he addressed a letter to the Ministre of Mariae, resigning his commission of Rear-Admiral. M. Guizot, seeing the mortal bluw which was to be struck at the policy of his Cabinet, went admirity to the King, who required of his son to withdraw his resignation. The Frince de Joinville gave the King a respectful hat immovable refusal, which cassed he way deven the tears of his mother, yielded with great regret; but not wishing to remain in Paria duffing the incerpoliations on the sudject of Otabeits in the Chamber of Septimes, he precipitately left the Tueleries, hefore there was even time to prepare his traveiling-carriage. Accommental outs he an Aldia de Amam the Device took a letter the Chamber of Deputies, he precipitately left the Tuderies, her there was even time to prepare his travelling-carriage. According there was even thut to prepare his travelling-carriage. Accompanied only by an Aide-de-camp, the Prince took a place in the utiligence of the Rouca Raliway, and arrived at Harre in the most strict (according, dissipating to receive from so, cowardly a strict (according, dissipating) asked (acchy), the homours due to a Prince of the blood. This conduct, of which the details are guaranteed by a person in a high himselfon, can only express the lively sympathy the nation superships towards the Prince de Johnville.

Imagine enything more tender than the love and affection which the Prince bears to his dear friend Dupetit Thouars! How he goes to the Prime Minister, with tears in his eyes, and a letter of eighteen pages ! in his hand, and bege that no steps will be taken against four brave Admiral until he has leisure to spin another Jare se long as the one be holds in his hand. Mr. Gdizot is quite sorry he cannot comply, as he might get a threshing from Lord Cowley. With this asswer the Prince is oblig to be content; but when he has an interview with M. Reine, and learns the cowardine of M. Guinot, he gets up his steam, and sends his resignation to the Minister of Marine. M. Guisot, more frightened at this than if he had seen a ghost, runs to the King, and he sends for the naughty boy, who rams sulky, and will not back out until To "J. H." (New Bond-street). - The let Life his mama enters in tears, when the resolution which stood dudgeon, throws himself into a diligence on the Rouen railroad, disdaining to receive either sandwiches or a flask of sognac from so cowardly a Government. From Rouse he proceeds to Havre à devorer son chagrin, a place remarkably well adapted for the purpose, as the tears that might be shed on the pier would soon mingle themselves with the waters of the Seine and the sea.

Another Opposition paper, quoted by the Journal des Dibate, says that " the Minleter of Marine, the brave Admiral, whose experience and personal character the young Prince himself holds equally in esteem, cannot recover from the terrible blow thus given him." Let us conceive anything more awful then an old maceaw being knocked off his perch by the wips of a brochurs ! The Journal des Débats, on the other side, reads the Prince a homily, in which it begs him to moderate the excessive vivacity of youth, and, in giving him a formal lecture, seems to have borrowed a word from this side of the water, by saying he has been guilty of " a step which we shall take the liberty to call an indiscretion." This article is not in the usual style of the rédacteur, but seems much laboured to prove that the King had no knowledge of this affair, by saying that the surprise the Prince felt at finding his notes published without his consent "was equally felt in a higher quarter." In this lachrymose effusion the endeavours of the editor have been to show how much the pamphlet has annoyed the Ministers; of this we make little doubt, but it has not been equally fortunate in endeavouring to screen the King from all knowledge or participation; for in the very first paragraph he admits that the Prince, who was President of a Ministerial and Naval commission, took notes which he intended for the perusal of his chiefs alone; nor does he centradict, but thus rather admits the truth of the assertion that the King gave permission to print eighty copies for private circulation. Eighty copies, and for private circulation! How long this privacy, in such a country as France, would last, we leave to the discretion of the reader to imagine.

The topics introduced by the Prince in his note have been so theroughly cauvassed by the Press on both sides of the water, that there is little novel for further remark. We may notice, however, a confession of the author which is true to the letter-" Our line of conduct should be pointed out by our very neighbours; but such is not the cese : we cross our arms, and England acts ; we discuss theories, and she pursues her applications." The French often imagine wast projects, but rarely carry them into effect, unless under the impulse of a hot-glory fit, such as they had in 1840, when M. Thiers set them singing the Marseillaise; then, indeed, they would have the fortifications of Paris as a species of dea into which they might carry all the plunder of Europe, which they anticipated. Their ardour here, however, soon cooled, and these works would never have been completed had not Louis-Philippe seen their advantage in other respects, and caused them to be finished. Of the truth of the Prince de Join opinion of his countrymen we need go no further tan to mention railroads. England had run them in different directions, and they had found favour with the Contisental States, before the French seemed awake to their value; then they "talked ye Gods I how they did talk !" Freues was to be covered with a net-work (réseau) of railroads, that would carry every man all over the country in a few hours. The talk continued for some time; but between Government and nompanies, nothing was done for two years more, and at last it has been English capital and enterprise that gave them the first and nearly the only railroad of consequence they at present possess—that to Rouse.

In like manner we muy venture, without any great risk, to prophery that they will never have a Steam Navy, at least at to compete with ours. We would recommend them, then, to be satisfied with the honours and glory they have gained on shore, and let the see alone. They may in a powerful fit of mour de la gioles et de la patrie (not the newspaper), build and fit out a very large number of steam-vessels, but they will be rotten as soon almost an they are ripe, and be able to go to see, with reference to their numbers, in the proportion the Prince gives of their present flotille, six out of farty-three. We even doubt if the dream in which His Royal Highness appears to have indulged will be realised to its fell extent-"to overtake en English merchant-vessel, pleuder, and burn her, and then escape from the steamers-of-war too heavy to follow." We may edmit that in the Mostilities threatened against the Manchester and Liverpool marine, some casualties may occur on the side of the spindles, but the Prince does not take into account that the heavy eteamers, though they could not eatch him at the moment, might follow him into his barbour and call for an account of the stelen muslis. Although be admits the possibility of our destroying Dankirk, Boulogue, Havre, and even Brest itself, he does wit seem to have calculated on this contingency, which is rither awkward, as it may further defeat or disturb the idea he entertains, at a future day, of writing a pamphlet or Commentary, " de Bello Calles."

We are happy to conclude with some remarks which do credit to the head and heart of their author; and likewise to refer our readers to a very able paper on the "Present State and Prospects of the British Navy," by a Post Captaia; the publication of which (p. 349) we commence this week.

The Prioce de Joinville, in his templing and patriotic pamphiet, has an hypothems, or righter of Firam, so clear to his countrymen, yet to Englishmen so the mailtie, that I am not surprised at its having hithers passed was little or no notice on the pars of the press of this on the part of the press of this on the fame of the press of the country. Ar a time when our troops are more than ever liable to serve on board ship, especially steamers, in case of a sudden war, it is matter of wonder that a larger Murine force is not established. It is unreasonable to suppose that soldiers of the Line can suddenly be called on, and efficiently perform the duties of Marines; they, too, used training on board; but once trained to see service, they like it and perform it well. Indeed, we have seen Marines in small ships of war performing admirably many of the duties of escence; and at the guns their services were invaluable, leaving the seamen free to work the ship by an equal number at least to the Marines embarked. would much like to see a large increase to the Royal Marine Force-large battalions of them at each of our sat foreign stations, and the Marines very frequently changed on board every ship of wer-thus rendering the whole force more familiar with both land and sen daties. A few months at use would instruct any Marine in his poculiar lities on board, and his return to land service would render him doubly an effective soldier. We never could see any decided advantage in retaining the same party of Marines on board from the commissioning to the paying of of a ship. We could name some advantages on the other side, beyond what we have already arged. liowever, of one thing we feel gulte certain, that the more Marines we have trained for sea service the less we need foar a sudden war.

Ir we were to judge of the " New Regulation Cap for the Infantry " by the numerous letters we receive from all ranks, expressing utter discust with it, we would be led to think that the selection could never have been made by a soldier. Indeed, it is worthy of fair consideration how far it is advisable to force this obnoxious head-dress upon our soldiers. We could show letters, and quote opinious, all tending to convince us that desertion has, in some coops, taken place, rather then dear the "Janua-cap," and that, in many instances, recruits have refused to enlist in a regiment that now has the cup in wear. The men who are to wear the cap ought to have some voice in the matter; and, we believe, the whole Army condemns it. It is not too late to amond the order-the issue, as yet, is very limited; but on the lat of next April the wholl Army will have this fools' cap placed on their heads, on i most suitable occasion, " Fools' Day." This cap, like other unseemly things, we heartily wish the Army well rid of.

Two large number of General and Field Officers who have dropped off the Liste, "ripe in years and honours," during the period clapsed since the last Brevet, induces the sauguine to hope that in the event of Her Majorty's presenting her people with a Duke of York, the granting of that suspicious title may be accompanied by a gen Promotion. We are well aware that the expense in the Nevy, caused by a Breest, is a serious obstacle; but is never was a time when a greater effort ought to be made to transfers young blood into the veine of England's defenders. We believe that this view of the matter is entertained in a high quarter; but he depressing influence of Mesers. A. n. has prevented its being publicly announced. Let us, however, hope that a promotion to some extent may be granted on such an occasion as we lovally unticipate.

An Old Lieutenant, R.N.

Planouth, Leutenant-Gueral of India has, in all place in the House of Chamagae, and in his capacity of Secretary-at-War, had frequent occasion to explain the detriment to the public service, and the cruelty to the individual languaging and in all properties of the service. individual, involved in al. undie prolongation of the service of the British soldier in the East Indive.

If he already incline towards the belief that ten or twelve years should be the maximum of service to be ren-dered in one unbroken period in an Indian climats, we feel convinced that a closer observation and practical experiance will strengthen his pre-formed opinions.

Extending the service of the sudder in India beyond the period we have named is fraught with evile, of which two are most conspicuous: he becomes prematurely unfitted for daty at home, whilst the continues but an indifferent coldier abgust. In top many instances the old Indian soldier is a drunkard and helplessly indolent; with one man to shave him, another to cook for him and wait at table, a third to black his boots and pipenisy his ware at taute, a turn to place, me boots and pipeolog his belts, he is just able to appear sober on parade once a day, and pass inspection. Thus, when the hour of action and danger arrives—when helds called on to march and to fight—" pluck" comes to his aid, and carries him through in many instances; but in how many others has this "diagrating like of helphoches incapacitated him from marking any prolonged temands upon his activity and powers of endurance? In proof of this we have only to look to the "present state" of a European regiment.... look to the "present state" of a European regiment—the list of effective fighting men actually in the field, contrasted with the numbers forms on the muster-roll. With these facts before us, we halled with satisfaction the discontinuance of the practice of "volunteering;" a system by which a regiment, leaving Indie, bequeathed to others all its worthless characters. The indolent, the drunkards, worn-out lichauchess, feeble in mind and body—all the manuals sujets, were sent to fill up the ranks of those corps which are or eight to be the the ranks of those corps which are or ought to be the main stay and prop of licitian power in the East. Many men, 100, volunteered, who, if they had returned to England with their regularit, might, by a European olimate, have been restored to health and atrength, reclaimed from bad habits, and have rendered his or eight years of good service at home; whilst by remaining in India they rapidly sunk into atter worthlessness. We this the time to gradge promotion to the Navy, because are surprised that Commandial Officers in India did not it may cost more money than an Army promotion? There earlier seek an abatement of this coll, by protesting against a practice so fath to the efficiency of their corps.

Sir H. Hardings is an experienced soldier, and we may confidently look to him for many beneficial reforms in the Military administration of India. Without disparagement to the present Commander-in-Chief there, whose gallantry at any rate is conspicuous, we cannot help repeating our regret that the command of the Army should not have chanced to be united with the Civil Government of India, in the person of so able so individual as he who has been entrusted with the administration of our Eastern empire.

tion of our Eastern empire.

We trust that, before leaving this country to assume his high functions, Sir H. Hardinge will urge upon the Court of Directors the imperative necessity for increasing the number of European Officers in the Company's Army,—a deficiency which may justly be regarded as the menster evil of their Military polity. The fatal error of maintaining a native Atmy imperfectly Officered by Europeans has long been denounced; but at no time, perhaps, is the remedy more loudly demanded than at the present moment—now when, as the Indian papers observe, an augmentation of 9000 or 10,000 men has been made by raising the strength of each company, without adding a single Officer; whilst 48 Officers have been withdrawn from the line for the Gwalior contingent of 7000 or 1000 men. These two measures, it is observed, are equivalent to a requestion of about one hundred Officers in the Bengul and Bombay Armies. This, too, in the face of an unquestionable authority upon such a point, and the urgent recommendation of air Charles Napier.

There are many other measures connected with the orthe notice of the new Governoi-General: such as the inconvenience arising from a constant drain upon the Line, to supply a hoterogeneous staff. It may become a question whether in India a Staff Corps might not advantageously be formed. It may rate, the utility of a Commissariat establishment, distinct from the Line, will be readily apparent. The anotiens of these Officers are dissimilar and apart from those of the Regimental Officer, and require peculiar training and qualifications. The barrack and stud departments, in like manner, should be distinct, and not filled by Officers borne on the

We have not space here to exter into the details of such arrangements, but it does not appear that there would be informountable difficulties in speedily introducing such a reform, without prejudice to the present incumbrates. The same rate of tremuneration would be preserved to the appointment, and the option might be offered to the holders of bining their respective corps, or of retiring from them, and being transferred to the departments in which they were severally employed. It would be a choice between prospective Military rank and command, or present employed, accompanied with the restriction of preferment limited to their own department.

'an reverting to our notions suspecting the losses sustained in India through the failure of certain mercantile houses there, and the subsequent retirement of several off the pertners of those houses in splendour in this country, we are induced to seek information on the following point:—

What has become of all Tract Moneys deposited with those firms for the support of families and their relatives? for, surely, those funds ought so have been the first consideration, before all other claims, according to the common law of the country. And it would be well for some of those Nabebs, to whom we alluded last week, to again look over their books, if not too painful a tank, and afford the required information to their Assignces, in order that the parties interested may have a trace where they may look for their rights. There are many besides the two widows, whose cases we have particularized, suffering in a similar manner, and they have an undoubted right to this information, as well signelish from those abundant resources; which are too evident from the style of living, and which require no further proof than what passes daily under our eyes.

As our "Gazette" is widely circulated in India, the foregoing hints may tend to produce a stimulus in that country to obtain assess to the records under the bank-ruptcles of these houses, to obtain the information required.

We are generally reminded, as the summer advances, bringing with it the period for relaxation allowed by the Regulations of the Coast-Guard Service, of the hardship which the Officers in that employment suffer through the rule which deprives them of the whole of their Coast-Guard pay during the limited period of leave of absence, which, either through signementances which cannot be overruled, or through signementances which cannot be overruled, or through any other cause, they may feel compelled or disposed to apply for.

Whether in its duties, or its privations, there is no more ardnoss, or mays constantly laborious Service than the Coast-guard, and there is no other wherein indulgence is more sparingly dealt out. On his first nomination, an Officer is more frequently than otherwise, we are informed, appointed to a station very many miles distant from where he has recently resided, or where his connexions or friends may chance to be. The married man may, it is true, take his family with him wherever he goes, but the Officer who is single is banished for an indefinite period to a station perhaps many miles from any person with whom he can associate, and he has no prospect of revisiting those whose society he has been accustomed to, unless at a considerable sureffice, owing in the first place to the long journey he hasto make, and the loss, in the second place, of the whole of his Coast-Guard pay during his absence from duty.

It must, we should think, be a melancholy reflection to his superiors whilst granting a short absence, or rather respite from the fetigue of heavy duty, when they know, that this indulgence—short as the Regulations permit ft—oan only be purchased by the sacrifice of a dearly-earned and a very inadequate pittance; and with what increased severity must not this role operate in the instances of Officers who have families to maintain? With these latter it is obvious that the most attentive economy alone can enable them to provide themselves with little beyond the common necessaries of life; and when half their daily bread is taken from them, is there not too much reason to fear that embarrasancest and pecuniary difficulties must ensue, which will require years, perhaps, to surmount?

We do think that the state of the finances of the country is fortunately not so low as to call for the continuance of the enforcement of so severe a tax upon useessary relaxation; and if the regulations and arrangements of the Service will admit of an Officer's absence from his post for fourteen, twenty-one, or twenty-eight days, during the year, for reasonableseceration, it should not be forgotten that he has well estimated the indulgence by many months of tedious privations, anxious exertions, seal, fidelity, and violance.

A correspondent, under the signature of "A Three Fear Gaines Bird," calls our attention to the fact that the usual promotion of one Ligatemant for service on the West Coast of Africa has not taken place. It has always been understood that every year the Admiralty selected one Officer from that postilential climate, and most ardnous service, for promotion; none have taken place since February, 1841. The general promotion general place since February, 1841. The general promotion promotion on that occasion, little with this most just and necessary rule; those whatever fertunate to obtain promotion on that occasion, little with one exception (Lieutemant Hell, commanding Relia), been but a very small period of the service on the station. We confidently appeal to the First Lord and the present Board of Admiralty, for a liberal consideration of the claims of the Officers in question.

Two Royal marriages are apoken of in the highest quarters, which are not devoid of meaning and importance. It is confidently americal that two Neapolitan Princesses are the promesses apose of the Duke d'Aumala and the Prince de Montpensier. One of the hotrothed is the daughter of the late King of Naoles, by his accord wife, and a sister of the Dudness de Berry. The other Princess is the daughter of the Prince of Salerno, and was lately refused to the Duke de Bordeaux. By these marriages the Royal statesmen of France will set at rest the suspicious entertained of his intentious upon the throne of Spain, and place it beyond the power of his restless subjects to complain of his not adopting a policy which would involve his Government in difficulties and his Kingdom in a Peninsular war.

The whole matter was left in the hands of the council, to make such arrangements, in consultation with Mr. Brand, their solicitor, as they may consider advantageous to the institution. History of the War in France and Belgium in 1815, containing Minute Details of the Battles of Quatra-Brus, Ligny, Waves, and Waterloo. By Capt. W. Siborne, Secretary and Adjutant of the Royal Military Asylum: Constructor of the "Waterloo Model."

T. and W. Boone.

Ir appears that historical truth, like things of the carth however instinct with spirit from heaven, must have time to grow and be developed; and that all attempts to force is into prometers ripenses have only one effect—to make it stude and indigentible, to blanche or colour it beyond the hues of nature, to leave it redolent of the waciously means employed to hasten its maturity, and full of the artificial heat it has imbibed in the process.

The truth, numerally developed, is atrong and sweet and rateful; with the sun and the shower and the pure sir iers, it requires care only, and an interest in its free growth to essure its gradual unfolding into the bloom of beauty and the fruit- of promue; and if 20 or 30 years be necessary to its perfection, there is no husbandry which can husten it, no means, chemical or mechanical, to force its growing or authorpate its esseen.

It is thus that contemporary blesory, like an ill-needed garden, presents the slow-growing seed of fact choked up with the thoras and brambias of party and preposeesion, and the warmwood and netties of perso maî t literness, professional envy, or national jealousy. The fact is obscured and distorted, and perhaps inentricable from the confused succes of fiction and falcehood which persion and prejudice have reared around it.

It is thus that the Battle of Waterlooms subject on which so many volumes have been written has hitherto while so many vortices the over writing and interto remained in west of a histories.

"Some years ago," mays Captula Siberne, in his prefere to the present wink, "when constructing a Model of the Field of Waterloo, at a particular period of the battle, I fluind it moreovery to make great varitions to proper that detailed information for make for the action in the already numerous published accounts of the military transposium of this."

The future historien will have no such difficulty, for in these volumes are collected all that can be se necessary to the perfect understanding of the most minute uncessary to the perfect understanding of the most minute details, so well as an enlarged and comprehensive view from every point of the great whole under all the changing sepects of the day.

"I ventured," says Captain Minores, "to apply for information to nearly all the serviving sys-witnesses of the implement which my model was intended to represent." The response was call either made in a liberal and generous spirit; and he gues no to say, "the result did indeed surprise me, so greatly at variance was this instantical revidence with the general notions while had previously prevailed on the subject."

No doubt, for even the apentinesses themselves must have better enderstood the mart they individually ented in have better understood the part they individually setted in that great drams, twenty years after the curtain had fallen, than they could have done during the bustle of the action, and before the audience. Had these very witremai, from whose evidence this great work has drawn up, written immediately efter the frameactions in which they were engaged, and while the facts were drawn and twisted into all the contradictory warpings of the moment, they could not have no clearly shown their own convictions—they could not so fully have comprehended their own relative positions, as, after years of reflection, probably of enquiry, and, at least, after observation and comparison, and the calm collection of contending statements, they were enabled to do. The moment chosen by Captain Siborne to request such information was one most fortunate, but still more happily for truth his object was not then to write history; his sim was to satisfy himself, and the world, as to a particular point—to demonstrate the perfect accuracy of his representation of the field at one interesting moment. All that did not bear expressly on that point was offered voluntarily, was written freely, without the thought of that public. -the frar of which in the closet so disqualtfice for meeting in the broad highways of the world. The experiment was a new one in history-the result is as satisfactory as reason would have argued that it must be, A compilation from the testimonies here quoted, had they been dressed up for publication, and subjected individually to the public judgment, would have been cold and lifeless; here all is freshness, vivacity, anaffected truth : and thus is explained the very superior style of the writer, who presesses a nerve and spring of thought and a brilliant colouring of phrase, combined with a transparent clearness of expression, such as is rarely transparent cirarises of expression, aud as is rarray attained by the purely literary writer, and seldom, if ever, found in connection with prefound, professional, and practical knowledge, as in this work.

As an instance of the power of the writer, take the following extract, which shows how an elegance of etyle, and a force of expression, such as distinguish the writings of Captain Minorne, can add to the interest of a passage, which, however related, must bere possessed a claim to the undivided attention of the reader.

The best way, however, to do justice to these volumes is to quote as largely as our space will allow from their contents; and, leaving Captain Siborne to speak for himself, we shall conclude this brist notice with another extract of general and personal interest, and content ourselves with hailing this work as a standard history of the Battle of Waterioo and of the Campaign in Flanders—a worthy companion and sequel to the Peninsular Campaigns of

"There is not, perhaps, an instance in modern history in which the threatening tide of battis has, through the lightning-like promptitude of decision, and the energetic application of yetremaining resources, been so enddenly and powerfully controlled, and so majectically and Irgaelidly husted back—overwhelming all end everything that, in the previous picultude of its force, it has borne shoft with hospath hopes, and carried along authlingly in its course—as it was by the immortal Wellington in this his last, his crowning victory. Never did a battle-field present so complete, so neagecia is transition of seene as that which succeeded the defeat of the Imperial Guards of France by the Guards of the Sovereign of England and the British Light infantry Brigade. The state of the Duke's Army at the time of Napoleon's last grand attack has already been alverted to, but let us glance again, for a moment, at the awfully-diminished numbers, and almost exhausted energies, of those heroic bands which, in front line, had been expessed to the incessant and concentrated cannonade from a range of batteries forming almost the entire are of which that line was the chord; subjected to repeated and vigorous attacks of all arius during so many hours, and now called upon to "resist to the death" another assault more fierce and determined than any they had yet encountered;—hook at the rear of that line, and observe the palpable defection in the ranks of an Ally whose countagens, whilst it constituted acceptace, too, at increased intervals, the wrecks of the British and German cavalif, with, however, the fortunate exception of the acceptace, too, at increased intervals, the wrecks of the British and German cavalify, with, however, the fortunate exception of the two light brigades as operationed with that of the Presench Army advancing to its last created point of attach, how discouraging an aspect when minds even of those Bildebrand; or the days of Queen Elizabeth. An His-teriod Romanos. By the Author of "The King's Ren." 3 vols. Mortimer.

Hap we been at the ciber of the author of these volu MAD we been at the cibew of the author of snees volumes where he was meditating—as of source he did meditate—on the choice of their citie, we should have suggested, if only for a joke—"Hildebread; or, the Man with two Mistresses." The "why" will be within his ken on the instant; but, although he hes—nawlesty, we think—allowed the reader to be in possession of the search of Iner from the first, it is not our intention—for we never like to forestal un interest—to enlighted that personge any farther on the subject. However, had we been kept longer in the dark, we should have falt infinitely more anxiety respecting the fate of the fair Spaniard.

much amused, sud much interested, in the permain of this work, although it can hapily be termed the production of a practised pan. The construction is too artificial, yet not sufficiently complex; or, in other words, the plot and the under-plot are not successfully blemied into a whole. At times, we have almost felt as though we were reading two distinct works—now a chapter of another. The writer—evidently from inadvertence—has an under predilection for pet phrases and words: "that person" is constantly in the way; we meet with incomman "promptures;" a "knock" is always "inflorted;" acousting is ever "following in the reals." "following in the wake" of something size, itc. How-ever, we mention these minor objections marely that the author may be upon his guard against them in fature. He one write well and effectively.

The story of "Hildebrand" is leid, as the title indicates, in the reign of Elizabeth—a period ever abounding with richly-varied material for the writer of fiction. ing with richly-varied material for the writer of fiction. Most of the chief personages of the day are introduced with spirited and characteristic effect; amongst others, Elizabeth, Burleigh, Leicester, Raleigh, Resex, Shake-apears, &c. In repeated interviews, the Queen and Sir Walter Raleigh are very happily placed in juxtaposition. In the capture of a rich Spanish galleon, by one of Sir Walter Raleigh's grainers, Hildsbrand, the hero of the tale, is made to may a consoleuses part. Here, the author tale, is made to play a conspicuous part. Here, the author appears to have had Cooper in view, yet without the htest air of direct imitation.

But it is by the domestic features of the story that the main interest is excited and sustained. And, in this view several of the characters have seven originality and disincolness; Bernard Gray, especially, who, throughout, is involved in considerable mystery. Hildebrand, himself, is well drawn; so is Inex, though, as we have before re-marked, the reader is too soon acquainted with her secret. Evalue, however, the daughter and heiress of Sir Edgar de Neville, is the loveliest, the most beautiful conception of the whole performance. Gentle, unauspecting, frank, confiding, with the unsuphisticated affections of a young, generous, and noble heart, she is the impersonation of "all that man can desire in woman."

At his earliest pleasure, we shall be happy again to meet the author of " Hildebrand."

The English Fireside. A Tale of the Past. By John Mills, Esq. 3 vols.

ALTHOUGH this new Tale, by the author of " The Old English Gentleman," will please many readers less than did his first work, it will, we doubt not, by all be regarded as much superior to his second—" The Stage Coach;" and none will be disappointed by it. It has, in fact, all the good qualities of the first-named of Mr. Mills's novels -its racy and original views of nature, and of sountry life and manners-its humour and breadth of character, netimes pushed to extravagance, but siways founded is truth and reality—its animated and off-hand style, and its carcless freedom from the conventional caut of suthership. Its story, too, is decidedly better conducted thee that of the writer's first work; at least the serious and "romantie" portion of it, and all that is connected with the establisher bero of the book, the renowned Bamfield Moore Carew, King of the Gypsies—an "Old English Gentleman" of a somewhat different cast and calibre from he of the "five old" song, but a "gentleman" in his way, nevertheless.

It is not our purpose to enter into a detailed account of the plot of this novel; indeed plot is not the forte of this pleasant and off-head writer. Whether it ever will be his force is more than we can judge. At present we are quite satisfied to take him se we find him and notably as we find him in this hie new work, "The English a blanch as anciable and agreeable a Fireside "-which is almost as sociable and agrees thing as that from which it takes its name.

[Par the " Nevel and Millers !

The the "Nevel and Military Genetic,"]

The well-known maxim of that great historian, statesmen, Maval Commender, and practical scheman, Sir Walter Raisigh, "that whosever commands the sea, commends the trade of the world, commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself," has been abundantly preved by the predominant power so long energiand his kingdom of Games 22-2-2. the predominant power so long exercised by the smalkingdom of Great Britain.

Countries protected by their insular position, containing shundant resources within themselves, to supply either directly, or by means of exchange, every demand of increasing science and civilization, and inhabited by a brave, enterprising, and energetic people, are intended by Nature to exercise a leading influence over the councils

Nature to exercise a meaning immunities were and well-being of other nations.

The British isles are so direcomptanced t their inhabitants, by their enterprise and by the advantages of their position, were enabled tomeoure the high station accorded to them by the world, at the conclusion of the late war, which a similar intelligent perseverance in the arts of which a similar intelligent perseverance in the arts of peace, has contributed not only to maintain unimpaired, but greatly to increase during the period that has also elapsed.

During the continuance of hostilities, the power of England was exercised to establish an equitable balance of power, and to protect Europe from the hostile aggressions of France. Now that, by the blessings of posce, England supports the axiom of the Emperor Antonious, "that the law alone is the lord of the rec."

"that the law alone is the lord of the sea."
Since 1815, the strife of rivalry in wir has been succeeded by emulation between nations, in science and traffic, no less keenly persued, but productive of a far better influence, by teaching each country how dependent it is, for a means of supplying a considerable portion of its wants, on the assistance of others. Occasional jealousies incidental to all eager competition have at times been visible; they have, however, quickly disappeared, producing hardly a ripple on the amanth stream of presuscense. visible; they have, however, quickly disappeared, pro-ducing hardly a ripple on the smooth stream of presence advancement, but yet sufficient to admonish the nation of the necessity of granting with willingness the means of maintaining armaments commansurate with her position, and of facilitating the application of her vast resources to the purposes of defeace, whenever such shall be required. It is doubtless that this state of constant preparation has, is a great degree, contributed, to impresse continuance of the longest peace ever known teather with a dee appreciation by all nations of the grant benefits which flow from it.

But as it has been asserted by Englishmen, both in pemphlets and in speeches, that we have been content to repeas upon the remembraties of our former power, and that we have neglected to keep pass with the improvements of other nations in their Nival armaments, thus endangering our old superiority, I am induced to venture the following observations, for the purpose of andeavouring to remove any erroneous impressions, that may have been produced upon the public hind with regard to the present condition of the British Navy, and to state fairly, for examination, the various goints upon which I found my secretion that it was never so ready or in so good a condition to undertake a war as it is at the present period.

It was formerly too much the custom of England to place her Admirals, at the commencement of wars, in oo mand of Fleets consisting of inferior stips, indifferently found, small, ill-built, and bad sailers, to contend against the Fleets of France and Spain, then containing the fiscat models known: our Officers and seamen were our only superiority.

At no period was this maniful neglect more severely felt then at the commenciment of Lord Anson's caveer; the evil was then at its height; and though remarked upon from time to time, it remained unshated until he became First Lord of the indeping the necessary improvement and experience to attimpting the necessary improvement. real and experience to attempting the necessary improve-ments; but the seven years' war intervening, which lasted to the close of his life, his good intentions and wise arrangements were not completely carried into exacution.

The almost continued war which ensued, may have in part operated to retard my material improvement in the part operated to retard sky material improvement in the science of constructing our ships, but whatever may have been the influence, it is very certain that, notwithstanding the several attempts that have at different periods been made in England to establish a system of scientific improvement in the form of our ships, none have been even produced from original designs, having sating qualities superior to those of our adversaries, before the commencement of this century; fad no great improvement in the ametraction, as tending to their strength and durability, and adopted, before he Robert Esppings, the interface of the Navy, introduced his admirablements of trussing the timbers together. His jusprovements were fully appreciated by the Admiralty, and his facturing is now appreciated by the a Admiralty, and his fastening is no versally af Mayed. He William Symonds followed Sir Robert Seppings a Si. W. Surveyor of the Nevy, having gained that post in consequence of being the successful compettur in trials in which vessels designed by him proved themselves appearing to those opposed to them; which trials were undertaken and carried out at the instance of the Naval administration of the day.

A comparison between the years 1744 and 1844, as re A comparison between the years 1744 and 1844, as respects the relative conditions of our Navy with those of other Powers, exhibits a striking difference. Our ships, instead of being fewer, are more numerous; instead of being neglected white in ordinary are kept in a state of constant repair; instead of being the smallest and theorems testions, they all (with the strangeton of some few left in our declyrands at the constantiation of the war) possess equal, and the more grount, built by Sir William Symonds, much greater capacity than the corresponding rates of foreign countries; while no Franch, or American can match them in point of speed, stability, or space for atoware. stowage,

Instead of our dockyards being ill-managed and worse supplied, as of old, now worky able to ordinary has her masts, yards, rigging, and bein fitted; and her anchors, cables, boats, and ordinates ready for instant service; besides, a large surplus of these articles despited when a new and admirable system, are kept in store ready for any emergency, or for foreign demands. It is, moreover, reasonable to believe that both is consequence of the many improved regulations that have been, from time to liese, improved regulations that have been, from time to time, introduced into the Navy relative to discipline, and as our great nurseries of foreign committee and coast trade have more than doubled the amount of our mosthant seamen since 1815, we shall have less difficulty, in the event of war, in procuring men for a service that is better understood and more appreciated than formerly.

But what has principally excited the anxiety of the public with regard to our future Naval supremary, is the natural series of the nava name.

troduction of the new power, steam, which has already reduced results of a vastness that were never dramp gtroduction of

This gigantic power is, in its various appliances, advancing the cause of religion and civilisation throughout the world, and is comenting a bond of general union, by ribing up common interests and common feelings amon rising up common interests and common feelings among the various nations of mankind.

It is a power, through its multifarious influences, more capable of maintaining peace than forts and Armica; and, on the other hand, will undoubtedly be the great mover in future wars. The knowledge of its strength and importance, now universally admitted, as is shown by its general adoption, has forced the conviction of the necessity of employing it as another means to aid in the protection of my manufactured. tion of our power and empire.

It is stated that France is much ciuted at its auccessful introduction, anticipating that it will second the means of overthrowing the proud position this sountry has always maintained, and that it will aulify the peculiar advantages we derive from our insular position, which they mistakingly regard as the solo ground of our Maritim superiority, forgetting from how many enuses this in reality proceeds; all, however, connected, more or less, with the prodigious and auccessful commercial suterprise of the country.

In a recent pumphlet, published in the Franch journal, La Prezze, the writer asserts, that "hanceforth the power of a nation will be measured by the number and the force of the steamers which can be set in motion. In this. under certain conditions, I agree with him; and in this rests a sure advantage in our favour, and superior to any we may have been masters of in former wars. He then continues :-

continues:—
"Stam has changed all laws of marigation—neither storms nor caims at sea upose any obstacle to the steamer. While sating boats are chilged to wait for a fair wind, to enter and depart from port, to keep in despirator, to lay un, and loss mustic precions there during a caim,—ateam-boats, earying with their motive fure, boidly face all the desgers of the costs, as ever with rapidity and precision all the movements commanded of them; hear out to sea, or share the costs, sectring as one or other, madeeuve is necessary for their object. In a word, they govern the tarrible element in place of being subject to its causion.

"In order to second and complete the power of the steam Navy, the art of destruction has made, for some years, predigious progress. The inventions of Attiliery, may been brought to perform then, with a success almost informal,—so that at present a Navatwer can no longer to conducted by the same laws as formerly. What part can three-deckers—samewes fonting citadels, which contrary winds so frequently condition to inaction—take against a steamer, armed with Palahan's guns and projection, which as the to be presumed the strongest the ber for the meantime spread have entered the heart of the ship, but in the meantime spread as black a anoke over the resset, that it is impossible for the crew to provide for their safety. Buypose a saling ship having to contain against a cleane-hood, which can maneuver apply resend her sides, throw broaddates late her velocents is evidenily resend her sides, throw broaddates also her vulnerable quarter, and never seem to avoid a rutum, such a contest is evidenily resingual, and the three-dacker, the former conductor at sea, must submit."

Let a modification, modes and, show to the annucleactional dien. 'In order to second and complete the power of the steam Navy,

It is needless to point out, even to the unprofessional reader, the fellacy and abstracts of the above reasoning. True, the subject is one upon which we can only employ conjectural reasoning, asserding to our infouledge and capabilities; but yet, like others, it is subject to influ-ences which bear upon one another, and from which inferences and sound argument can be as consistently deduced, as the truth of history is by the investigation of analogous events and circumstances. And, although careful com-parison, nice discrimination, and clear, impartial perception or causes, both material and physical, are, I own, the qualities necessary to attain a just estimation of this subect, and against which qualities I may have little more than my personal observation, gained by some professional experience, to hear me up throughout my assumptive argument, I do not shrink from expressing with conindence my conviction that, however much Naval wars may be modified by being shortened, through the introduction of steam, I apprehend, and trust to be able to convince my readers, that their conduction, upon the general principle of by-gone wars, will be materially the same. That, although the invention has opened a straight road upon the sea to future fleets, as pioneers have already over mountains and across countries for Armies that, although it will facilitate the regulation of a system of communication, to be maintained between the Government and its armaments, with greater cese; and although it will place the resources of the colonies in a position to led with greater facility by the Minister at home that, sithough trade will be more severely harassed, and coast towns and distant possessions will be liable to be more unexpectedly destroyed and taken-harbours and arnenals piscopi, by its influence, in a position to demand greater vigilance and protection—yet, the change thus produced, I trust fam prepared to show, will not be such as to effect an alteration in the result of contest between nations that have hitherto shown an inequality upon the

It has been said that an invasion of England on the part of France will be greatly facilitated, now that steam power is applied to Naval purposes; but, instead of this being the case, the contrary will be the result (which I shall hereafter show).

Steamers will do more effectually the former duty of cruisers and gun-boats; but their success in this, as in other contingencies, depends upon the activity with which the resources of the beligerent countries are mutually applied, and the saparity of their resources; but these annoyances can be but as the lance and the arrows are in the hands of the Spanish pleador and handerilleros - more incentives to increase the rage, without the power materially to impair the strength of either party. The battle is still to be fought, and the destines of nations can only be decided by opposing their power in masses against masses; large bodies of men, properly led, properly armed, and properly disciplined, must be placed in a posi-tion to make their numbers and strength most advantageously felt; and thus, sgain, the victory, as formerly, will be decided in favour of these who have the best national spirit to urge them on; or who, being equal in this respect, bring the greatest numbers into the field.

Ships are merely convenient vehicles by which Armies are brought together upon tauther element—steam will enable them either to come together more quickly, or to avoid coming together at all, us the case may be; but neither steam or any other mechanical agency (which is common to all) will ever dispense with the moral agency of trained men, by whose conduct and courage slone the issue of all wars must be determined.

It is to be apprehended that steamers will in war occupy the place of frigates attached to Fleets; they may in this way amony the outskirts of the enemy's Fleet, tow ships into position or out of danger, and thereby greatly aid in ening the action. Steam may even be employed to the line-of-battle ship herself, and thus improve upon the old mode of propelling ships by sails alone; still I con-tend that we shall require our large floating latteries to fight the great battle which decides the fate of empires, which must ever be fought by men, that is, by numbers of men noting together, duly led, and fighting under the influence of national sentiment; it can only be in such structures, built to hold large hodies of men. armed to employ those men, and formed to be able to keep the sea, and do the service required of them in all weathers, and at every quarter of the globe.

It is impossible to make up for the want of national perseverance and resolution by the application of machinery sione; and although I do not deny that occasionally o steamer armed with guns of enormous calibre may gree-ously amoy a line-of-battle ship is a calm, or under some other untoward circumstances. I am fully satisfied that by proper arrangements (indeed, such arrangements have been proper arrangements (naeed, such arrangements have been considerably advanced) every sailing alib may be so armed and worked that the moral and physical agents on board of her will prove an overmatch for that power which relies for its superiority on its mechanical machinery alone.

Allowing that steam will become the leading, instead of the auxiliary force, destined through its various appliances to rule according to its possession the fate of nations, do we stand in an inferior position now than we did in ages past? Is it a power more easily monopolised, ruled and adopted by 5ther nations, then by ourselves; or should we, in the event of the prestical results proving its superiority applied as it is at present overships of the Line, be taken at a disadvantage? Would we then continue, from the a affection and veneration of the old associations and hallowed remembrances of the glorious deeds dene in them by our fathers, raly upon them as our only means of defence, and in the 19th Century—this siècle of changes trust to them and our own good consciences alone for evercoming mechanical power, edded to the resources of the nature and almost equality of our own.

I am not surprised at our enthusiastic neighboure en-tertaining such a chimera, but to see the general squity of thought of our sound-reasoning and more tenecious countrymen, seriously distarbed by such vague and broad assertions, does, I own, greatly autonish me. What I do they really take upon credit the assertions, written without references or authorities, in many of our party Journals, that we are slowly, and with reluctance, following in the wake of other nations in the establishment and application of steam power to Naval purposes? Do they pay their taxes for sums voted yearly and published in the yearly estimates for the improvement and increase of ster construction of foundries, engines and ordnence, and still believe that no Naval administration evinces forethought, or has at heart the well-being of the great service it guides, and upon the perfection of which rests the stability of the empire?

Within the last 16 years I have visited each of all the stations where England's fleets are employed, and have served twice upon all, except the coast of Africa and the West Indies. In the cast, where British rule governs a West Indies. In the east, where British rule governs a quarter of Asia, and one hundred millions of subjects; and in South America, where she has no great possessions I have seen steamers in almost every port, but none that were not of English build, and but two that bore not England's fisg. From the east coast of China to South-ampton I came by steam, and by steam have been conveyed the greater portion of the Government disputches from that distant country to our own, for the last two years.

With the exception of the section between the west coasts of South America and Chins, the globe is surrounded by English steamers; and yet we are gravely told, and the public as gravely give credence to the assertion, that the Naval sceptre is trambling in our grasp,that we have allowed the Powers of Europe to increase and improve their Navies, nutil they have reached the equality of our own; while France alone has, in point of force and efficiency in her ateam power, eclipsed that of every other nation.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have received a despatch, dated 18th May last, from Sir Charles Adam, K.C.B., Vice-Admiral of the White, and Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's ships and vessels on the North American and West India station and the seas adjacent, stating, that in virtue of authority duly conferred upon him, he had declared a blockade of the port of San Juan de Nicaragus, and that the same was established on 30th March last. It is further notified, that the measures sanctioned by the law of nations will be adopted and executed with respect to all vessels and surgoes attempting to violate the said blockeds.

Intelligence has been received of the death of Captain R. Fair, K.H., of H.M.S. Conseay, 26, which ship this gallant Officer fitted out for the Cape of Good Hope station in May last. His achievements in Her Majesty's corvice were distinguished and smineatly meritorious. In 1804, when Master of the Beaver shop, with whose boats, and those of the Scorpion, he essisted in cutting boats, and those of the Scorpion, he assisted in cutting out the Dutch brig Assistanta, of 16 guns, and while Master in the Amethysi, he received the praise of the Admiralty for his gallant deeds at the captures of the French frigates Thetis, in 1808, and Niemen, in 1807. Subsequently (when Lieutenant) he had command of a gun-boat in the Walcheren expedition, and afterwards, when he desired to the former graphic he desired a second gun-boat in the watenered expension, and afterwards, when in command of the Lecust gun-brig, he drove a Freach brig-of-war schore near Calais, and ultimately succeeded in destroying her. He was at the single and blockade of Dantzic in 1812. He attained his Post-rank in 1837.

The arrival of the Danas, French frigate, 56, at Brest, puts an end to an idle story which is reported in a Bar-badoes paper, that the Dublin, 50, Captain Tucker, had been sunk, with her colours flying, by three French frigates, for having given protection to the Queen Pomaré, who had taken refuge on board of her. The Danae was one of the frigates at Tahiti, and she mentions nothing of such an svent

THE MERCHANT STRAM-VESSES AND THE RE-PORTED ARMING OF TREM,-We are enabled to conradiet the report that any special or particular survey has taken place of the merchant's steam mavy, with the view of arming them, or that any armament is prepared or being prepared for them. The Admiralty have a register of all the mescautile steamers, with their tomage and expabilities, and it is only a revision that has now taken place. There is not a gim or any description of stores specially provided for them in the Government establishments; but if, unfortunately, their services should ever be required, the departments of the Admiralty are so complete in every respect, that, at a very short notice, the available mercantile steam marine could be converted into a most important and efficient auxiliary to the royal naval force of Great Britain.—Standard.

Roberts, returned to Woolwich-deckyard at nine a, st. on Wednesday, bringing despatches from Capt. the Right Hon. the Earl of Hardwicks, communding the Binok Regis steem-vessel, to the Lords Communicationers of the Admiralty. The Lightning also brought intelligence of the errival of the Eduperor of Russia at Rotterdam in the Black Emple steamer, at four o'clock P.M. on Monday, after a delightful passage of twenty-one hours—the see being mearly as amouth as a mirror all the time. The Lightning was about two hours behind the Black Eagle in arriving at Rotterdam, although the latter went over more gro than the former, affording evident proof of the superior construction of the Black Kagle for speed, and the excellent quality of her engines. His Imperial Majesty, previous to the departure of the Lightning from Rotterdam, in the most liberal and kind manner ordered diamond rings to be presented to Master Com. S. B. Cook, Mr. Ailen, Additional Meater, and Mr. Payne, First Engineer of the Black Eagle; and rings to Muster Commander Roberts, Se Master Foster, and Mr. Truscott, First Engineer of the Lightning, and 500t., to be paid in Englishd, amongst the we of the Black Eagle and Lightning steam-vessels which conveyed his Imperial Majesty and suite to the Continent; 350% is the sum allotted to the Black Eagle and 1501, to the Lightning. It appears that on the arrival of the Harle ouis and Winderer at Asheen, a demand of redees for the pillage of the brig Fallel Khair, at Qualia Batto, was inaiated on, but after various evasions and delays on the part of the Bajah and his Ministers, the vessels proceeded at once to Qualla Battu, where the outrage on the brig was committed, the principal buildings of which, together with the house of the chiefmin who took the most conspicuous part in plundering the vessel, were set fire to The force subsequently eniled and destroyed. ### PRESENT STATE AND PUTURE PROSPECTS OF THE [For the " Nevel & Military (involte."] (Conditional from No. 550, p. 888.)

Russia, the most extensive empire upon one continent in the world, and protected at home as she is by forests, marshes, rivers, and climats, almost invulserable, comprises a mass under one rule of $72,935 geographical equare miles, formed of countries extending along the whole northern portion of the eastern hemisphere, from the frontiers of Posen and the Gulph of Bothuis on the west, to the l'acife Closen and Behring's Straits on the east, or from the 18th to the 190th degree of east longitude, being a distance on the 60th degree of latitude of nearly 6000 miles; and from the north to south, from the Arctic Ocean to the Black Sea to Circassia, to the south borders of the Caspian Sea to Persia and to Chius, spreadadth of 1500 miles, including i ing an average bro seventh part of the terrestriet globs, governed by the of one man, whose will is the constitution, whose word is the law—an emperor possessing the genius and ambition of an Alexander, and a nominal Army of a million, would, if in alliance against us, judging by the bias he has already abown, turn towards our possessions in the cast, to the old land of Tamerians's conquest and Baber's empire, where the memory of splendous is still linked the threne of Dehly, upon which the descendent of the first founder yet sits in state, although powerless and a pensioner.

The genius of the Russian Emperor might be equal to the task of eastern conquest, if Britain were powerless and the sea commanded by his Fleets; but as power is at present belanced, the Fates would war against him—even were our indian subjects lukewarm towards us and favour-ably disposed towards him. The harriers which secure his power within the boundaries of life own empire, would operate strongly against the aucosasful presecution of a war of aggression; prodigious tracts destined to perpatual starility, thisly unableed, utterly destitute of resources for the napply of an Army, ky in the very route to India, and must be passed before he leaves the burders of his own territory. But these privations and obstacles we will suppose are encountered and overcome by the energy of suppose are encountered and overcome by the energy of his genius; we will imagine the Russian Army emburked in their own ships on the Casplan Sea. To which shore shall it then steer? To the south, to Persia? to pass over the great Salt Desert—the burning country of a stareing people, or to the south-east to gurmomental land of migratory tribes that own no master—that are abliention, and who have bound together by no duty or obligation, and who have never shown sympathy to formigueen.

If at a great sacrifice ambulon overcame these obstafatigue.

Russia might aid her allies with her flatte Fleet, to ityre our North-sea trade, of swa to undertake the chimora of smbarking, in conjunction with France, an inveding army; but the same precentions and protection we should use to counteract such an attempt on the part of France, would be amployed with greater she light deaster, he more distant rival, who would, after the first disaster, he atterty powerless for the remainder of the war.

It is asserted that we should fast the loss of this Baltin trade more than Russia; this I doubt, for we have many resources, through different channels, to make up for the loss of the articles she supplies; while on the other hand the greater portion of her commercial revenue is derived the greater portion of her commercial revenue is derived too greater parties of ner commercial rewrited is exerved from her trade with us. In the first place, she is a popular nation, with a greater expenditure in proportion to her commerce or manufactures, both of which vital arteries may he said to be derived from one source—the stiecess-ful vigout of her government, which when lopped of one limb (consequent upon the stoppege of her trade) would be effectually paralysed; and in the second place, she has no private resources to support and supply, as we have, the necessition of government.

In 1839 the entire value of the experts from the empire were only 15,833,000., while our imports into it were 1,686,391/., their revenue being about 16,495,000/. ours about 63,000,000%.

In seriously expressing my belief at the possibility of England being able single-handed to keep her own? against the combined alliance of France, Russia, and America, I trust I may not offend the pride of any of the thinking portion of their subjects, or spacer to be uttra-ing a vain braggadoolo by thus stating what may be con-ceived impracticable against odds formed of powers each of the Brat rank.

But it must be remembered when nations unite to ware war against a Power, to destroy that Power they ca only send from their own shores very small portions of what within their own boundaries comprises their internal and intrinsic strength; they can only penetrate where the weak scale of defence offers a vulnerable spot. In a country like Great Britain, compant in size, possess of enormous wealth, full of internal resources, as having a brave and energetic people to protest their homes, their property and native soil, no auch apos esists. Two centuries and a half ago the portion of North Ameries extending between the 29th and 47th degrees of latitude -from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, was a wild, an-known country, inhabited only by the Indian, as wild and savage as the beast he church. The trackless forests which covered half her surface were alike the abode and protection of the animal and the man. Far west, eggin, the immense grassy region or prairie, like the sea. The bitter feeling of womided vanity which might produce the alliance would be alliand by his God-Rapacky-when the profit was found not to compensate for the lone.

America cannot coerce her normiation, or com cles, and the march was continued towards the East, the co-operation for state purposes, at the expense of private interests, to undertake a foreign and aggressive war; and, owing to a change of feeling, which has within the last fow years arisen in our Navy, in consequence of a better system of management having been followed, it will be found that no great number of British seamen will serve against their native country; while, notwithstanding the enormous increase of population, the American seamen have not multiplied at a sufficient ratio wherewith to supply the deficiency. This is owing to the daily improving capabilities of the country requiring and sapping up all the superfluous population, while presenting a sure means to the industrious of gaining a competence by lebens gaining a competency by labour, and enjoying a very independent mode of life.

The consequence of this paucity of seamen w that although privateers might injure our trade, that although ateaniers might harass and annoy our West Indian colonies, yet no large and effective force could be formed of sufficient power to attack our distant possessions, without leaving their harbours and arsenals open and undefended, to almost certain destruction. It was by the exercise of the laws of virtue, and the principles of rectitude, we were led on to our greatness—of shore secred laws which regulate the intercourse and moral obligations, both between virtuous individuels and virtuous states; and it is by their maintenance alone our greatness can continue.

Our empire of the East is an empire of opinion, founded upon and maintained by the knowledge of our trath, and supported by the belief in our undeviating integrity. Our honour aliayed the jealous fear of the Spaniards, when they gave the Great Duke the command of their Armies: and our honour made the Turk (the hater of the infidel) and our honour mean our ally and admirer.

THE NAVY OF FRANCE.

Tar attention of the public has been directed of late in so singular a manner to the state of the Naval forces of France, that we have exemined with some conficulty the estimates of the Minister of Marine for the ensuing year, and the result is not unworthy of attention. The French Navy has been increased, during a period of 14 years of uninterrupted peace, to an extent and at a cost which no other nation has ever willingly incurred, except under the pressureinf actual war, or to discharg the peculiar duties incident the great colonial empire-such as that of Spain or France was in the last centurydischarge such as that of England is in the present. But w this rapid progress of the French Navy is compared with the stationary condition of the mercantile shipping of that country, and when it is ramembered that the demand for the ordinary services of the Franch ships of war during pence is confined to voyages of coromony or discovery, or the transport of troops to and from Algiers, these estimates really present a very surprising phenomenon.
In 1830 the budget of the Marine amounted to 65,109,900

france, or about two millions and a half sterling. The number of seamen voted for that year was 12,926; the number of vessels affoat, including transports, was 128, and of these only one was a slip of the line.

In 1843 the vote proposed to, and accepted by, the Chamber for the Navy was 106,905,876 france, or about 4,280,000%; the number of esamen was 26,926; and the number or size of vessels was proportionably increased, or rather increased in a far greater proportion, for it is stated on official authority that the number of guns ready or rather increased in a far greater proportion, for it is stated on official authority that the number of guns ready for active service was in 1843 tenfoid what it was in 1830. The vote so the Navy and the Colonies for 1845 is on the same scale as in the preceding years alone 1840. The amount is 107,341,366. It should, however, be observed, that about ease-tenth of this and the other great aums we have quoted is appropriated to the civil service of the Colonies; but it does not include a vote of about 5,200,466f, for maritims fortifications at Cherbung and other places. The number of seamen now required is 99,073, of whom 33,754 are to serve affort, and the temainder are destined for service in the ports. This force is to be employed to man a great aquadron of avoidation and exercise, consisting of 8 sail of the lites, I frigate, and 3 steamers, whilst besides this fiest, 149 sailing vessels as steamers of less dimensions are kept in commission.

In addition to this numerous armament, it is now proposed to introduce a new class of slips, as a reserve for the Navy, under the name of vessels are commission do said, gartially equipped for sea. This class will consist of 30 ships, including 9 sail of the flue, a Gartice, and 6 steamers, including these two divisions of the French Navy, the total force which sught be ready for sea at a short notice is stated by the Miniber of Marine to resouch to 140 sail and 50 atenment, in all 190 visuels. This Fisci, however, is the most important and available portion of the French Navy. The number of vessels in ordinary (including many of a very doubtful description) does not exceed to many; and the number of new ships launched is very inconsiderable.

Without the slightest wish to speak divespectfully of our neighbours' persevering, though (as we think) mispinced, exertions, we would guard against the supposition that we should look with any apprehensions on this armaneut, even if it were ever to be directed against our own country. These statements are taken from the Ministerial returns, which, of course, put the best surface on the matter; and it is easier in all countries to make a blue book than to fit out a facet. The world has it on the Prince of Joinville's own authority, that of the 5s tessmers which out so good a figure on paper, only six can be said to compete at all with the British steam-frigates; and in the roll of line-of-hattle ships we recognise ant a few veterans, which are eafer in the beam of Toulou than in a gale of wind or in action. Upon the whole, we are rather surprised, considering the vest amount of money spent on the Prench Navy in the last ten years, that the actual result is not greater. For if we take for example the 2s ships of the line reported to be affaut, we shall find that only 4 of them have been leanched in the last ten years; it of them are patched-up vessels of the time of the Empire, which have been more than half re-constructed. two, the Mester and the Algreiras, are condemned; and the Ville de Merseille is not much better; and really the Priesland, the Hercule, and the Genuppa are the quity new first-rates which can be mentioned with approbation. The same remark applies with almost equal severity to the frigates, which used to be regarded as the best craft of the Frenck Navy. Nine 8e-gun trigates and those which are incomination and those which app in committee the whole of this important branch of the fleet, incinding those which app in commitsion and those which are incoming to our own re-are disarmed.

Without being equally explicit on the state of our own resources, we may mention, that in the lest 12 years only, 20 new line-of-battle ships have been added to the British Navy, carrying no less than 1710 guns, and armed with all the improvements that science and experience have given of late years to Naval line-of-battle ships have been added to the British Navy, carrying no less than 1719 gues, and, armed with all the improvements that seisence and experience have given of late years to Naval architecture.

In their more recent appealations on Naval matters, French writers and politicians have thought it to take the Naval power of this country as their disheded of comparison. We shall not imitate their example, or attacked of comparison. We shall not imitate their example, or attacked of comparison. We shall not imitate their example, or attacked of comparison. But we may remind our usighteder that, although they have not yet reached such a degree of perfection or atrength as to deprive the members of our Beard of Admirally of their natural rost, they have attained a very commanding maritime position with reference to the rest of the world. On all the various occasions in the course of the last at years on which the French Navy has had occasion to reise its tharacter, to exert its power, and to interpret the resources, it has been placed in amity, and sometime in active on-operation, with the British flag; and the most prejudiced of our would-be sidereasters will admit that the growth of the Navy of France has been materially assisted by her good understanding with England.

If the French Navy admires for no other purpose than to menace this country, and to expourage amongst the people of France a wanton desire of injuring our colonial possessions, or our commercial relations, we also the to not quard against such a hostile force. But nothing is more evident that the power and prosperity of the French Navy mainly depends on its not being brought into collision with our own. For all the purposes of policy or pracetion in every part of the globe, the flag of France is as independent and as majer, respected as that or any maritime power; for thaginryouse of defence, or of operations in conjunction with the other great powers, France can equip a powerful feet, but if the ware plunged in a time of agreement, and oppo

The General was pleased to express his approbation of the clean and soldierly appearance of the men. The junior Officers were then in succession tested as to their knewledge of company-drill and Light Infantry movements. The General next visited the Regimental movements. The General next visited the Regimental Hospital, and on his return to the Castle saw the men in their fatigue-jackets, and the recruits fully equipped. These latter were considered by the General as a fine body of man, being nearly all young, and from bit. 9 ins. upwards. The General then proceeded to see the dinners, and was pleased to remark the cleanliness and orderly arrangement obtaining in the barrack-rooms. The General afterwards visited the Regimental School, of the sharacter and sook of suiting in which he was pleased to approve. The Officers and Non-commissioned Officers were then put through the new system of sword exercise, after which seral commenced a minute survey of the Regimental Books. In this department the General appeared perfectly satisfied that the spirit, as well as the letter, of perfectly sentence that the spirit, as well as the letter, of Her Majesty's Regulations was atrictly complied with, and that a regularity of entry and examination was adopted which must many heart the best practical results. leave of absence on urgent private affairs.

The Emperor of Russia went on board the Black Eagle at Woolwich on Sunday evening, and, with Prince ert, greatly admired the fine looking and remarkably clean detachment of Rl. Marines under Lieut. Marriott selected for the occasion to serve in the Black Eagle. His Imperial Majesty first expressed his approbation the hearing of the men, and observing a medal on the breast of the Sevjeant, and on the breasts of several of the privates, the Emperor, in the kindest manner, saked the Serieant for what acrylon he had received it, and was answered that it was the Syrian medal, granted to those engaged in the siege at Acre. His Imperial Majesty then addressed Lieut. Marriott, and complimented him in very flattering terms on the fine appearance of the Non-commissioned Officers and men under his command, and gave orders that they should at once shoulder arms as the easiest position on duty. The cloth was laid for dinner on tables taken on board at the last moment, and placed on the deck of the Black Eagle, His Imperial Majesty having expressed his desire to witness the sosnery on the banks of the river Thumes as the vessel prococded down the river. ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY. - The gentlemen Cadets studying at Woolwich, have been supplied with beautiful new carbines, about 24 ibs. lighter than those issued to the Non-commissioned Officers and Gunners and Drivers of six compenies of the Royal Artillery, and in progress of sex compenses of the Moyal Arthory, and in progress of being delivered to all the companies in that branch of Her Majesty's Service, when rendy to be issued. This handsome arm has given great astisfaction, and every carbine is equally well finished as any few ling-place could be for general use. The gentlemen Codets have acquired a perfect knowledge of the exercises of the new arm, and fired from them yesterday for the first time. The new Infantry cup, with a peak indice and another behind, has seen been cap, when a peak impore and account usually, has give occu-taken into use by the gentlemen Cadeto, who appeared in them for the first time on Sunday, last. It is said a similar denotiption of cap was issued to the Army about the year 1818, with the addition of some white ornaments, but it was soon discontinued. The new Infantry Cap is easier for the head then the chaco still generally in use; but the appearance of the latter is preferred to the furmer by all ranks in the Service. #### THE NEW CHACO.

To the Editor of the Navat and Military Gasette.

Sin,—The new-langued cap has been actually issued, and taken into wear by some regiments; and I have had the felicity of witnessing the ugly reality on the heads of some of Her Majesty's Infantry. I need scarcely say that my personal observation of the striking effect and harmonious proportion produced by this favoured handdress, has not diminished the mingled indiguation and contempt with which, in common with every Officer is the Service, I regard it. What possible advantagethe Service, I regard it. What possible advantage—what hidden and marvellous good qualities—are supposed to have found a place in this specimen of ingentity, a man at loss to imagine, the sole tangible and apparent hquest being its greater lightness, and power, by means of a peak behind, of protecting the head from the raise, both improvements that might easily have been worked out in the present form of chaco. It was, therefore, understand for any numerous section of the case, we have of the called for and unnecessary to make any change of the kind, and least of all to an upsightly and disfiguring little hat—such as is now our lot to wear. It is really too bad, and beyond a joke. No one can possibly look at the appearance of the man already sporting it, without laughter, so completely (as if no better ultimate aim and intention were devised) does it seem calculated to convert the best ver-up, amartest, and most soldier-like looking man that ever marched after a drum, into a sub-ject for the pencil of Cruikshank! And why should such things be? Why should our unfortunate foot-solsuch things be? Why should our unfortunate fout-not diers be thus still further degraded in their wallke pride and panuply, while the Clevalry and Horse Artillery are well and resistully dressed and appointed? Why should the Infantry stone—the renowned Infantry of Rugiand 1
—by this new barlequinade in their uniform, attain to a yet more unenvisible distinction then hitherts, amongst their gay comrade.? Why should they be made to feel yet more keenly than aver the "deep guif" of risioule "that is set" between their humble appearance and that of their more favoured brethren—the mustachised heroes of the gun and sabre?

It seems, verily, at if those in authority over our soldiers, not contented with allowing to flourish the many positive hardships which stready dishearesh them, and induce so many of them every year to desert, were further wifully and blindly ast on the perserse intention of rendering, by successive alterations for worse, the uniform worn by the lufantry so utterly bete-ful in appearance, so deplorably mean and deficient in the commonest tests, in middition to its peculiar poverty of material, as to render the outward seeming of the men not only a matter of shame to themselves, but a fruitful subject of gibe and southing amongst civilians. How far such a line of proceeding, obstinately persevered in, in times like the procent, can be considered either safe or politic, or likely to promote a loyalty of spirit and con-tentedness of feeling amongst our soldiery, must be manifest to every man of sense in the country.

I cannot help remarking, too, how—while the wise-acres who preside at the clothing-board have thus made themselves as busy in depriving the British soldier of one of the few articles in his uniform at all neat or well shaped, how thoroughly they have shut their eyes to many other points calling for improvement. If a reduction in weight was desired, there was the great clumpy knapsack, the still more clumpy cross-belts, the awkward and ponderous pough, all susceptible of increased lightness and portability, to say nothing of increased postness. If a change for the better were deemed advisable to the soldier's smortness of appearance as well as comfort, there was tawdry trhite lace, the trumpery shoulder-straps, the general clownish make and absence of all fitting in the man's garments, all crying to be done away with. But these were not even glanced at; the unfor-tunate chace was alone to be condemned; and yet, in most of the items of dress and accountements above men-tioned, our Infantry is not only miserably appointed, com-pared to their more favoured brothren of the Cavairy, but we may almost may, one of the worst-dressed Armic in Europe—and feariestly add, that there is not an Officer in the Service who does not daily feel and comment upon our glaring deficiency in these respects. What can be worse, I repeat, than the size and shape of our hoapsack, or that of our pouch? Are not both altogether see surge, and made of our pouch? Are not both alfogether too hippe, and made as if purposely to overload, and by their awkward fitting to tire out the host soldiers? What can be more hideous and unbecoming than our Oxford-mixed trowsers, and their miserable beading?—our patry power buttons, and little pinched-up shoulder-straps i—the centre Companies looking still more wretched from their contrast to their flanking brethron with wiege. (These same wings, by-the-bye, are things that should be worn by overy man in the Army; they are peculiarly finglish, and a better set-off to the soldier than any other shoulder against.). But why areas of what we might be 2---in all know what But why speak of what we might be 2-we till know what we are, and that, had so that is, from the tendency of so many Commanders to having their mon fitted with gar-ments like a sentry-box, we shall all shortly he still flore attractive in the " new phage."—I am dec. THE LATE MAJOR GENERAL HORACE CHURCHILL.

I allude to my late friend and brother Officer, the late Maj. General Horace Churchill of him I have seen no record.

Again, Her Maj my has been most graciously pleased to shower honour and rewards on all the survivors who distinguished them selves on the faild of Maharajpoor; but shall the conduct of the Officer of the greatest rank who lifed that day, for one whose extraordinary gallantry was especially noted in that day's general orders, and whole davotion to he duty was notariously the ultimate cause of his fall—stall his conduct be entirally forgetten? Has he no hith or in.) Are there now an whom the reward of a grately country might be dispensed? Or shall it be seld that then the gallant soldier dies for his country, the fatal shot that penetrates his heart, cancels the debt of his country or gratitude?

In each week's Gantte have I expected to read some name, and in each Joulal to see some paragraph, which would tell the tale of the gallant squider's posthumous reward.

THE NELSON MONUMENT.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gazette.

Sta,-After the heart-stirring appeal made to the good sense and the best feelings of the people of England, and particularly to the opmineroial classes, for a subscription to complete the monument erected in Trafalgar-square, to one of the most devoted Naval heroes that over fall a sacrifice in the cause of his country, by the Editor of the Evening Sun, on the 20th of May last, and subsequently, and at different periods before, by your able and talented Gazetts, I am surprised that nothing as yot has been done. What is the cause of this spathy? Has Nelson ceased to What is the cause of this spathy? Has Nelson crased to occupy the thoughts and affections of his country? or, is patriotism become an empty sound?

shall certainly begin to think that loaning, banking, and funding, by creating debts and producing a numerous class of idlers, besides awarping away that noble class of souptry gentlemen - men of low estate - has produced, or is producing a change in the character of Englishmen. I hape these fears are imaginary; for he assured, Sir, that a time is coming when England will be obliged to put forth all her strength to resist the storm.

Notwithstanding the flourishing state of France, and its apparent amily with this country, the pamphlet of Prince de Joinville has excited, and is exciting "Young France," who are sugarly watching an opportunity to go to war. A spark may involve us in a moment with our neighbours. To be assured of this, you have only to enter the selons and coffs of Paris, and to listen to the observations of this excitable people. But the evil would not rest here. Would America remain neutral if we were rest bere. again involved in war with France? I should say, certainly not. Therefore it is time for us to be "Up" and thinking. A CAPTAIN IN THE NAVY.

QUARTERMASTERS AND TROOP SERJEANT-MAJORS. To the Editor of the Roral and Milliary Gazette.

Sin,-In reply to a letter in your Gasette of the 25th ult., headed "Quartermasters," and signed An Old Carairy Officer, I must beg to deay that there is the allightest want of a Quartermanter-Serivent aspecies and the Cavalry; as I can prove from indisputable facts that the Quartermanters are not employed on duty the fourth part of their time-I might may, indeed, not more than are hour out of the 24-the Troop Seriesat-Mejors performing the chief part of their duties. Your Correspondent asserts that no assistance is rendered to the Quartermaster by the Troop Serjeant-Majors; but of this, from what I shall here submit, you and your readers will best judge. The Troop Serjeant Majors keep a delly diary of the number of Officers and troop horses for which forege is drawn, as also the number of men for which bread and meat are issued. The forage is drawn immediately after morning stables, the Troop Serjeant-Majore attending, each of whom down forage for their troops re spectively, and hand to the Orderly Officer a signed spectively, and mand to the tructly triffer a signed certificate of the amount, the Guartermaster having nothing to do but stand by to assist in seeing it weighed. This part of the duty does not accupy many minutes, after which they proceed to draw bread and meat, but only on alternate days; in this instance also the Troop Serjeant Majors draw for their men, and enter the number in a book kept for that purpose, the Quarternumber in a book kept for that purpose, the Quarter-minter, as in the preceding case, being merely present with the Orderly Officer to report upon it in the exect of the men having any complaints to make. Now all this does not occupy more than half an hour, and then the duty of the Quartermaster is done for the remainder of the day, whilst the Troop Serjeant-Majors attend fields days, stables, drills, and parados. In addition to being present at what the Quartermaster so much complaints, about, the Troop Serjeant-Majors draw the foul, for their troops, which takes place once in the week; they are present at the issue of clean bedding, change is When a re ntonaile. &c. &c., when required. ment leaves their old cantonments, the Troop Serjean Majors remain behind to give up the barracks, bedding utensils, and every thing in their charge. When with Majors precede the troops and take up the question they require, and not only their Captains but the Commanding Officer holds their responsible for a strict performance of those daties, the Greekernsster being more formance of those distinct, the Geneticementer being moreing a looker on; nor does that individual knew in the later degree the stage separately, or the suggesting collectively, but by the returns readered daily, welling, and mouthly by the Troop Serjean-Majore. How do whole aquadrons and troops manage at out quarters, where there is no Coopermanter in-Why, the whole of his duties are performed by the Troop Serjean-Majore. The Office Covalry Officer states that in the Infastity, the Quartermaster has a Guarterinanter-Serjean, a Corporal, and Pientes to maint him. I had here to state that in the Equality series to a Orderly Troop Serjean. Major, Orderly Serjeant, and Covantry Research had a Covantry there is an Orderly Troop Serjean. Major, Orderly Serjeant, and Covantral hadd by there is an Orderly Troop Serjami-Major, Orderly Seriesat, and Corporal held remonsible for the chrestiness of every part of the Barracke daily, whilst the Chiefermaster is affing at case in his room. Comminding Officers do this in order to make the appointment of Guartermaguer as respectable as possible. In every Cavalry Barrack there is a special man (generally an old pensions) retained by every succeeding regiment for the purpose of heaping the Barrack Squara, &c. tiesn and properly awept. Brooms are allowed from the Ordinutes Dapartment for the world; the women are made to clean the cooking bouses, weaklanging &c., the Orderly Trees Sarksant, Major being the responsible success for one to clean the cooking houses, washi pusse, &c., the Drierly Troop Sericant Major being the responsible person for getting all this done, and who gives not the orderly room a

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1844.

Tare history of the Pative Army in India is replete with instances of valour, destion, fidelity, and discipling. The warlike races of India from which the Native army is chiefly recruited, may be said to inherit all the qualities, mantal and physical, which make a warrior; and if we claim for Europeans apperiority in these great qualities, we only claim them in common with those who have made the descendants the Northern nations masters of made the descendants. The Northern nations masters of those of Asia in arta and arms. Of late years, however, we have been, by most injudicious agulations, cramping the energies of our Sip bees, while a very few years ago a fetal blow to the disculing of the lative Army was dealt in abolishing corporat phisheless. From that hasty and pernicious order of Lor. W. Bertinck may be traced distinctly the gradual loss hing of that admirable discipline so ably and so leniently diministered in every Native corps. The regiments which have recently mutinied, it is well known now, would not be have listened to the few disaffected among them, has the wholesome fear of a disgraceful punishment—as add oral punishment is hald to be by high-caste natives—in ended over them.

We have full information from Officers in the three Armies of India, of the evil effects produced by the abolition of corporal punishment in the Native regiments; and if it be true, as we begin it is, that an order has been sent out to rescind that of Lord W. Bentinck, we congratulate the Armies of a measure so just, judicious, and absolutely requisite the Native Army, worked enormous and absolutely requisit the native army, worked enormous injustice for a time. We well remember, prior to its modification, when the order clearly defailed the Hindoo and the Musulman from the lash, while it let the Portuguese and other Christians saving in the Native regiments liable to it. Indeed there have been instances of sentences passed to the effect we have stated against Christians.

Our rule in India is the rule of opinion. Could any; measure have been developed more calculated to lessen that rule than abrogating, as a diagracing punishment, the infliction of stripes in the case of a native of India, and continuing that punishment in full force upon our own countrymen, our fellow-pldiers, our follow-Christians? It has on many occasions happened that corporal punishment has on many occasions happened that corporal punishment has been inflicted on Her Majesty's soldiers and on the European soldiers of the East India Company, in presence of a brigade, two-thirds of which were natives of India, Can we reflect on this and not additre the stern and Spartan discipline which stayed the burning indignation of these European soldies from open mutiny and releasing their fellow-countrymin and fellow-Christian from a punishment not to be inflicted on aliens and idelaters, while they were given to witness its inflation on the European—their brightes example in war, and that soldier of whom at best the native Sipahee is but the copy? We again repest our congratilations to the seatlous, just, and considerate Officers of the three Armies of India, that their hands are to be trengthened, and their old and sound discipline re-established, in justice and immercy, as exercised during long yars of fame and honour.

Tux attention of the public has been gradually drawn to the state of the Navy, and within the last two or three years vast improvements have taken place. The Nevy needed the outery that was made at the time, and the exposure of our deficiencies then, in stores and ships, have done good. In truth, a similar exposure might be made of our defenceiers state as a Military power, atterly baequal, with our bandful of an Army, to properly defend our own counts, and to garrison our vast Colonial and Indian Empires. It is really a grave subject for reflection what England is to do for an Army larthe event of n war with France and we give a war with France as an example, with quite as little wish for a war with that nation, as the Prince de Joinville expresses for a Naval war with England. Where is the small but excellent Army of England !" It is scattered over all India, and Tthe lieges in good humous... a test of tab to the whole dispersed widely, in amail sambers, over our many olonies and possessions. Where is the Army to resist fifty thousand man assembled on the coast of France, inity thousand men assembled on the coast of France, and liable to be landed on our hitherto inaccessible isle? Can we spare men from Ireland even? Still less from our Foreign settlements. Stem has its disadvantages for us, as well as advantages, but we are too apt to think early of the latter. We sak, at it wise to leave this fair land of England without a great national and constitutional force always ready to be called out?—we mean the Militis. When has this force been out for training? nay, more, we ask, has it any bal existence—has it been even lately balloted for? Lathere any one Regiment of Milita now enrolled, armed, and trained? Not one! It to-time, full time, that if our Standing Army is not to be more than a handful of men-the nation should be no longer left without a force to defend our shores. We believe few will be found to deny that it must be on our Militia we shall have to depend in the event of a sudden

Ir is amusing to us on this side of the water to notice the means by which the Government of France, when any object is in view, works on the passions or fancies of its subjects. We have seen, by appealing to their love of glory and innate desire for war, how the wast fortifications of Paris and its environs were run up, and how the Government never allowed this zeal to cool until the whole work was completed. To this ruling passion of Frenchmen's minds it has been found advantageous to Shrow in occasionally a small dose of alarm to atimulate them to action. They are naturally penurious, and carry this feeling with them into the Chamber of Deputies, where, after the first challitien of generosity, they are often troubled with a cold fit, that makes them hold hard by the purse strings.

Recently a more liberal grant was wanted for the service of the Navy-forth, comes the pumphlet of the Prince de Joinville, which plays beautifully on the passions and prejudices of his countrymen. First, he tells them that had the Eastern question ripened into a quarrel, the French Fleet, on the coast of Syria, would infallibly have defeated the English squadron, which, by the confession of some of its own Officers, (we suppose he alluded to something said by Sir Charles Napier in the House), was inferior in numbers and discipline. But, then, says the Prince, what would have been the use of this victory; our Fleet, although conquerors, might have been damaged, (rather likely), and where bad we the men or materials to restore it to its former efficiency?

He then flatters them further by painting the future exploits of the Steam Navy of France, which is to be navigated without sailors, and strike dismay into all the fishing villages on our coast, beside the pleasure of capturing and burning our merchantmen. As a cort of background to this brilliant picture, he throws in a small portion of fright-if they dog't increase the grant and the Steam Navy, then will the English come and burn Dunkirk, Havre, Cherburgh, and perhaps singe Brest itself.

When the grants for the service of Algeria came to be discussed, some costive Deputy wished to reduce it by 1).000 france; this immediately brought up the Old Soldier, Marshal Soult, who startled their faculties by announcing that the Emperor of Morocco (not Mary Anne Clarke's Bond-street shoomaker) had pronounced a Holy Was ! As the Perisians probably form their ideas of the Moore from Othelio, they will at once conjure up the idea of an Army of such fellows ander the influence of religious fenaticism. Seeing the effect produced, the Minister of War makes them imagine the elempointment of their to build farthiness for them on the frontier, and defend them from the grim looks of the Blacksmoors. Let us consider Mr. Hume attempting to strike of from the Army Belimstes the enormous sum of 490L, and the Secretary-at-War telling Manchat the Empirer of Birms had mounted his elephant! Somatimus a bit of gratuitous compliment to the national vanity is thrown out, to keep

If we were inclined to puzzle our readers, we might set them to guess how fir Robert Poel's measure for regulating the banking system could be assessed into a ex pliment to the French people. This is the way it is managed in the " Journal des Debate; " after giving an outline of the plan, which it is said will no doubt be carried into effect, the writer continues right late smooth, the writer continues—

"This bill be amother step taken on the other side of the Chunnel in political and administrative controllection, into which Great Britain seems forced by some hidden power. After enciralising the poor laws, and a control emperation of the system of railways, we are come to the amission of paper money; thus, the doctrine of controllection, of which France has given the inflicture, and which has been copied by all the nations of the Continent, has at length found its way into this aristnoration regime, which requires so much division in the way of local influence, that would seem to offer insurmognitable difficulties. It is a Tory administration that has accomplished this new conis a Tory administration that has accomplished this new consumer, one of the signs of the april of the times the most view, and a most remarkable proof of the influence that our courty exercises, in peace and war, by hardsuperiority of mind well as by the power of the eword, over the destinies of world."![1]

The impression that might be received in the first instance, that England was impelied by some secret power, is entirely done away by the after reflection, that she is only soted on by the superiority of French intellect.

WE would request attention in the promet quarter to the discontinuance of a small allowance hitherto granted to the Staff Serjeauts of Infantry. For many years the allowance of fuel for one small room was granted to every two Staff Serjeants, as appears by the Warrant of 1838. Recently, however, this allowance has been limited to the Serjeant-Major and the Quarter-Master-Serjeant, by an order from the Board of Ordnance. We too well know the wishes of the Military Authorities to improve the condition of the Non-Commissioned Officers of the Army, not to feel confident that it has never been contemplated by them to place two Staff Serjounts in a room without fuel and light. At all events, the Government cannot intend that these Serjeants should, out of their pay, provide fuel for a room in Barracks. We regret to add, that in all the new Barracks the rooms for the men have been made as large as practicable, and for the alleged reason, that as only one fire-place is in each room, no matter how many men may occupy it, there will be a saving of coals and candles! Is it thus we are to keep our soldiers from spending their spare time in pot-houses ! We ask, can twenty-five or thirty men find comfort in their Barrankbarn, in a cold winter, with one small fire and a dim candle? The evil, instead of being amended in the case of the Privates, is now extended to the Non-Commissioned Officers

WE have occasionally adverted to the position and prospects of the French colony in Algiers, showing the progress that has been made towards the final settlement of that country. More than fourteen years has now elapsed since the first attempt at conquest, each year presenting some fresh obstacle or difficulty, which have required the greatest efforts of France to meet. These may be indeed called gigantic, with reference to the numerical strength of the enemies opposed to them. Since the first two years of occupation the French force, of all arms, has never been less than 70,000, very frequently more-at one period above 80,000-of as good troops as any in Europe, commanded by excellent Officers, and fernished with all the appliances of war; and yet they have failed, during that long period, to complete the conquest of a set of herbarous Arab tribes, without discipline or coherence, and the peaceful occupation of the province of Algeria seems still remote; for they, have now raised a freak enemy in the person of the Emperor of Morocco. The system of tactics pursued by Marshal Bugeaud, of having moveble columns, and assimilating their matches and manus of procuring subsistence to those of his enemy, has the very great success in different quarters; but still freit als ments of opposition seem to arise in quarters the least expected, and belle the combinations of the Franch General. After the seizure of the Smala of Abd-el-Kader, and the submission of a vast number of unpyronounceable tribes, we might have been led to the equolesion that the whole province was gradually bending under the yoke, and that the French, after all their trials, would have been allowed to remain in quiet possession. On the contrary, so late as the 12th of May, the French Marshal, commanding in person, was opposed to a mass of Kabyles on the right bank of the Oued Sobsou; he defeated them, and they retired to the left bank, where they joined another division of their countrymen ; they were attacked by the French General on the 17th, who fguined what their General calls a difficult but brilliant victory, in which the Arabs left between 300 and 400 on the field, beside a considerable number of wounded; he had not ascertained exactly his own loss, but perhaps it might be about thirty (une trentains) killed, and about a hundred wounded. " The Marshal proposed to continue for some days to ravage the country of the unconquerable (indomptable) Flicene, who had mover received laws from any oue." In a subsequent paregraph, the Marchal mentions that these pleasing means of bringing people to reason had succeeded, and that these indemptable Flicens had sent in their aubmission. As they had conquered the only invincibles that we have heard of in Algeria, we would naturally suppose that the whole game was up; but we find that, recently, in defending the amount of credits for this service in the Chamber of Deputies, Marshal Soult acknowledged that's new enemy had sprung up on the western frontier : that " the Holy War has been proclaimed in Morocco; and that 13,000 men were concentrated opposite to the French positions." It appears that the brave and indefatigable Abd-el-Kader first took refuge in a part of the desert considered as neutral territory. | "Since then, he has repaired to Morocco, rallied to his standard several tribes of the empire, ever ready to obey their Sovereign when it aunts their convenience, and who, blinded by religious fanaticism, were easily fascinated by the exhortations of Abd-el-Kader, and insomuch, that the Emperor was unable to resist the impulse communicated to him by his subjects, and was obliged to proclein the Holy War. The Minister of War. however, thinks that 'the sight of the French troops, and the dispositions made by the Generals, would be sufficient to check the warlike ardour of the hordes of Morocoo." " This, however, seems doubtful. In addition to the persussions of Abd-el-Kader, the recent dispute of the Muora with Spain may have given additional impulse to this hostile feeling; while a proud and haughty people, full of religious seal, may prove more troublesome fees than the French are aware of. Mahometanism is more bigoted in proportion to the ignorance of the people amongst whom it prevails, and no country has been less visited or enlightened then Morocco. It extends from the Gulf of Tiemeen on the east, to Cape Nun on the south-west, bounded by the sea and the Atlas Mountains, which last afford a succession of defensive positions, and finally a retreat secured in the trackless desert; it is further peopled by a numerous and warlike race. Whilet events on the western frontier hold out a promise anything but peaceable, an event has occurred at the other extremity of Algeria, which, though of not very great consequence, is sufficient to show that even in the long-conquered province of Constantina, the French have sectched the snake, not killed it." The Duke d'Aumale had left at Biscara a actali garrison of about 45 Officers and men, intended as a sincleus for the formation of a new hattalion of Constanties Pasiliers, to be raised from the lately submitted tribes; some of these native recruits and the este of the fort (Cashah) to Mahommad Sighir. the Kalifat of Achmet Boy, and his followers, during the night, who surprised the Frenchmen in their sleep, and killed them all except the Berjeant-Major, Peliage, who escaped; and they carried off in plunder 60,000 france, left in charge of the Commandant for the payment of the recruits in posse, 300 muskets, as many uniforms, and two pieces of Artillery. This anodote may serve to about how much the French may depend on the apparent submission of the tribes, and how much they owe to the highway to Toulou being open to them. Arguing hypothetically, after the facilition of the Prince de Joinville, if a war was to take place between France and sup mation superior to her in maritime resources, adies to the culosy killed them all except the Serieant-Major. Peliuse, who of Algeria; and all the men and money that have been expended in the attempt to awar it to Prince, might as wall have been thrown into the ecc.

We last week offered some remarks on the political character of the late Lord Sydenham. As we then observed, his recent Messeirs are but a passgyric; and his personal character is there represented in the most favourable of lights. It is but with his public server that we are concerned, or we would addupe some facts (and those connected, too, with passages in this work), to show that he had even more than a sufficient shape of that "self-confidence" attributed to him by him Magrapher; and that, in spite of an assumed affability, he was to fact selfwilled and dictatorial. We shall, however, forbear to enter upon this subject, merely remarking that When his biographer pronounces him next to Fift perhaps " the most remarkable instance in modern times of the early attainment of great public aminence by the force of talent alone"—we presume he means to limit the distribut to our countrymen, and even then his claims are very doubtful. On the Continent we think we here heard of one Napoleon Buonaparts, and others. Did Fitt himself rise by talent afone? Who was his father?

When in 1829 we find one party of politicians beauting, and an opposite party admitting, as a national bands, that our weapers had nearly doubled since 1625, we can-not but deplore the miserable infatuation of men calling themselves statesmen, and can scarcely refrain from wishing that a refusal to take the agricultural produce of other countries, especially of the north of Europe and America, should, at any hazerd, lead them to skut out our manufactures altogether, as predicted by the authori of this mannoir.

At page 308-9 we have an elucidation of the schemes of emigration so diligently promoted by many of our leading public men. With respect to Canada, Lord Sydenbam proves very clearly that all but the hardy agricultural class will raffer or perish by the change. To withdraw this class is to sap the strength of England, and probably to raise up future powerful adversaries to the mother country. The project is therefore certain to be ruleous one way or the other; but it falls in with the favourite schemes of a certain most unprincipled faction, with whom self and self alone is the governing motive.

At page 91 we meet, from the pen of Mr. Thomson, with a most severe, though perhaps unconscious satire on Lord John Russell—the greatest man whem, whether a noble or communer, he ever, by his own secount, had the fortune to meet. Poor Lord Hydenham ! his math lay not amongst the favoured haunts of great men, or his powers of perception were very limited. The Editor's Dedication to the former nobleman is singularly unhappy in its phraseology--almost ludiorously so to those who remember the relative personal appearance of the two Whig statesmen, there placed in justsposition.

By far the most valuable portion of the volume worth all the rest-may be found comprised in the following passages of Lord Sydenbem's journals and letters : a testimony, not to be auspected, to the sterling value of mere money yetting nations—such as his own party would render ourselves. It is pleasant to find Lord Brougham, in his "Historical Skatches," entering upon a lame vindication of the Americans, and pronouncing Lord Sydenham unqualified to form an opinion upon the subject, as having been only two years in Canada! Was Lord Brougham himself ever either in Canada or the United States ! We rather think not.

too lesient to the Yankees in his second series, I do not mean in his orticisms upon their social habits. Spliting and chawing, sating with their knives or builting their mean, or sleeping three in other people's hads, are all disagreeable in their way, but regard only themselves or any intortunate traveller; but I mean in greater matters. Their government seems to me the worst of tyrannies—that of the mob supported by the most odious and profligate corruption. No man who sime at power dars avow an opinion of his own. He must pander to the lowest prejudices of the people, and in their parties (the two great ones which now divide the Union, the Locolicoes and the Whigh, the only object of the leading men of either is to instill some wretchedly low sentiment into the people, and then exploser it for their own adventage.

"There is searcely a statement of either who would not added the most violent or the basest dootyme to mourrow, if he though that he could work it to advantage with the majority. If you resember the character of the newspaper editor in Cooper's movel of 'Homeward Bound,' you have the type of the whole people, high and low. It is the corrections of Walpole's that made of Commons extended over a whole people. Feculiation and jobbing, the only objects; deltasion and the basest fastery of the people, the means. The joke is, that we is Agroys are ant to fancy that the flovernment is a cheap one, the patronage little, 'the means of correspiton small, and the people careful of their own interests as opposed to the attempts of their rulers; this, all because we find the President getting only 1990d. a year? The reverse of all this is the fact. I will venture to say that there is more jobbing and dirty work in one State of the Union, than in all Dawning Street and Whitehall. Every place is the object of party contest, and they are immunerable in each little flovernment of each fatte. The people being the direct bestowers of all, it not immediately, at ieast indirectly, are adulated in the most diaguating and degrading way, and the trans from which an educated inhulster of legroughmonger in England would turn with diaguat, is greetily awallowed by them. The result, of course, is general debasement. Those who aim at place and power are dorrupt and entrupters. The meanse who bestructhem are ignorant, prejudioed, dishonest, and utterly immoral. You will naturally say, under such chemistances, how is it that they aware to repulse and of resh field, and the burble will have at once. If they differ undertake there is not passed to the work place and the passed or repulse and of a resh field, and the burble will have a considerin

THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

The Emperor of Russia, attended by Baron Brunow, ent on Saturday forenoon to the Senior United Service Club, in Pall Mall, where his Imperial Majesty alighted and inspected the different saloons.

The extent of the Emperor's munificance will be best understood from the following detail of some among the very many acts of liberality which have distinguished his Majesty's sojourn at the court of Queen Victoria:

Her Majesty's Household .- To each of the principal Lords of the Queen's Household (six in number) the Emperor, upon taking his departure, presented a magnificent gold anuli box, elaborated with a beautifully-executed enamel portrait of his Majesty, surrounded by diamonds. These hoxes are of Russian manufacture, and of the most superb description. The Equerries and Groom in Waiting on the Emperor were also presented with boxes of a similar description, surmounted by the Imporial cipher and set in brilliants. To three chief officers of the Royal Mows the Emperor presented massive gold buxes teas elaborately ornamented than the preceding. A variety of smaller gold boxes, watches, and rings, were left by his Majority at the disposal of the Master of the Household, the Hun. Mr. Murray, for presentation to the principal domestics under his direction, while the munificent sum of 2000i, was given by the Emperor to be divided among the servants employed in the departments severally presuled over by the Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, and the Master of the

The Society for the Relief of Foreigners in Distress has acknowledged a spontaneous contribution by the Emperor is aid of the fonds of 1000 guiness. A draught for that sum having been transmitted on Saturday lest by Chovalier Bankbausen to Mr. Labunchere, the secretary of the society.

The Nelson Testimonial.—The Imperor having exertained that the funds for the erection of this national tribute to our greatest naval hero were inadequate to its completion, immediately directed Count Orloss to inclose a draught for 500l. to the Duke of Wellington. The draught was accompanied by a letter from the Count, written by command of his Majesty, and expressive of the pleasure the Emperor felt in contributing towards the erection of a testimonial to so great a warrior.

The Wellington Testimonial.—This great work, which has been so long in progress in Mr. Wyatt's studio, and which is now rapidly approaching completion, was not forgetten by the Emperor. The funds, sithough large, are as yet wholly inadequate to the magnitude of the work, and Count Orloff was directed to inclose a draught similar in amount to that contributed towards the Nels Monument (500%), to the Duke of Rutland, one of the most active members of the committee for its srection. The draught was accompanied by a note similar to the one addressed to the Duke of Wellington.

The Ascot Race Fund.-The Emperor's munificent ontribution towards the stakes annually run for at Ascot is already well known. It is therefore only necessary to say in addition that the prize will consist of a given of plate of the value 500L, having engraven on one side some subject illustrative of Russian history, and bearing the Imperial arms on the other,

The Pour of St. George's Parish .- Not the least se sonable act of benevolence on the part of the Emperor was the presentation of 200 gainess to be divided among the poor of St. George's parish, Westminster, at the discretion of the rector. The donation was accompanied by a letter to the Rev. the Dean of Carlisle, the incumbent of St. George's, which stated that his Majesty having resided a few days at Ashburnham-house, felt gratified in offering a small sum for distribution among the poor of the parish in which the mansion is situate, at the discretion of the rector.

German Haspital .- Towards the formation of an hospital for distressed Germans in London the Emperor con tributed 100 guiners.

The Russian Embassy Household .- Here, as at Buck ingham l'alace, the Emperor left a munificent sum for distribution among the domestics, the maitre d'Aulel, Mr. Penrce, having the honour to receive from His Majesty a reacte, having the honour to receive from his majority a magnificent diamond ring.

Colonel Rowan, Mr. Mayne, and Captain Hay, the Commissioners of Police, each received a diamond ring from the Emperor in acknowledgment of the attention shown to his convenience; and the various efficials in the office of the Consul-General, M. Benkhausen, were also presented with similar tokens of the Emperor's liberality.

Captain Sir Francis Collier, who had the honour to steer the barge which put the Emperor salore, has been presented with a handsome gold anuff-box, set with brilliants, and bearing the Imperial initials in the Russian character on the lid. Commander Smith, of the William and Mury yacht, and Mr. Oliver Lang, the mater ship-wright of the dockyard, have each received a aplendid diamond ring; and 25% have been distributed among the crew of Sir Francis Collier's barge, the labourers who put the carriages and beggage on board the Lightning steamer receiving 20% among them.

Shortly before the ambarkation of the Emperor in the

The Emperor of Rassis intends, it is said, during his present visit to his Royal brother-in-law, the King of Holland, at the Hague, to proceed to Amsterdam; also to the little village of Zaardam, formerly inhabited by Pater the Great, and whose cottage has, from time to time, been kept in the most scrupulous order, and preserved in nearly the same state as at the period when the illustrious carpenter resided there.

The Emperor's visit to this country cannot fail to have good effect, as it has done so much to remove the prejudices which excited against him by the public representations made of his character, us there has been nothing throughout his whole conduct during his visit except the most courteous demensions and affability to all, and a deep sense of the attention paid to bign; and it is impossible by could have assumed this appearance had it been contrary to his disposition; but one glimps; of his countenance and fine bearing must have been sufficient to the unprejudiced, to dispel the illusion.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, the King of Saxony and suite, left Buckingham Palace yesterday for Claremont. A detachment of the 17th Lancers formed the escort. The visit to Claremont will be short, as her Majesty is expected to return to Buckingham Palace this day.

Sir Henry Hardinge, the new Governor-General of India, had arrived in Paria, accompanied by his son and his silic-de-camp. He landed at Dieppe on Sunday, and immediately started for Rouen and Paris, from which place he was to go direct to Marsailles.

The Dukedom of Sussex.—On Thursday, the House of Lords art as a "Committee for Privileges," is order to hear the evidence to be produced in support of the claim of Sie Augustus D'Esie to the various titles and rights possessed by his father the Duke of Susax. The pidges, as on the former occasion, were required to attend, and at 10 o'clock took seats on the woolsack. After receiving evidence, and many letters had been read, the further hearing was fixed for Tasseday week.

Club. At a quarter past 12 the signal gun was fired and the hoats slipped from their muorings, the hows canted round with the tide, their weather jib-shorts being hauled down taut to their weather bows, and their huge foresails paying their heads round faster than even it. Polka" has turned the heads of half the town. T Onome took the lead, closely followed by the Gazelle, Mystery, Exquisite, Blue Bell, and Laigna. The Exquisite is a very feat little boat of about 15 tons, but all the others are of 25 tons. In Erith Resch the Guome still retained the lead, but the Enigma had crawled up close to her taffrail, whilst the Gazelle was a good third, and the Mystery, Blue Bell, and Exquisite following close in their wake—the little Exquirite holding on with ber larger cumpetitors in excellent style. In Northfleet Hope, however, one of those southerly slants came oming over the flat land, and carried away the Gazetle's topmast, and as the wind luiled at intervals, she was sorely orippled by this disaster. In Gravesend Reach the Enigmu ran by the Gnome, took the lead, and rounded the buoy at Coshouse-point at 24 minutes to 3, the Gnome 24 encouds only astern of her; the Blue Bell and Mystery came round 2 minutes after, and then the boats hauled their wind, and the real sailing began. Stokes, who was sailing Lord Alfred Paget's vessel for him, well knew the acting Lord Alfred Paget's vessel for him, well knew the capabilities of his eraft, and by apringing his luft occasionally, lifted her well into windward, and gradually fore-reached and weathered on the Gnome. In Gravescud Reach he had passed all the ether boats, and crawled up alongside the Gnome, to windward, and goutly drow shead of her, taking the lead, which he retained to the last. The Gnome gradually dropped astern; she was passed and considered by the Real and the Engage and in Long Reach it because quite evillat that the match was between the Blue Bell and the Enigme, and in Long Reach it because quite evillat that the match was between the Blue Bell and the Myslery. In St. Clement's, however, Sawyer (who was sailing the Blue Bell) made a based in so windward, whilst the Myslery fetched right through the Resch and obtained an advantage which decided the fate of the day. She rounded the buoy of Greenwich at 5 minutes to 6, whilst the Blue Bell was only 12 or 14 seconds sterm of her. The Enigma came up shortly after, a good third, followed by the Gnone, whilst the orippied Gnords and the little Enquisite brought up the rear. Lard After Paget was thus again the successful competitor, and when the cup was presented to him by the Commoders, Mr. Harrison, his Lordship seid that he had appeared on often as a wineer, that he was almost ashamed on show himself on the decks of the steamer; but still his westered to express a hope that he should appear in the highly objectly next year. Tux Indian Mail has brought to the French mercantile world confirmation of previous reports respecting the dis-astrous effects of a hurricans, which took place at the lake of Bourbon, on the 21st February. As we have seen no account of similar disasters in Mauritius, it may be supposed that that island has escaped, and the effects of the tempest been confined to the neighbouring solons, where it has done infinite damage; the ships Jacques Carper, of St. Malo, La Cipsy, of Nants, and the Julia, of Bordeaux. have been wrenked on the count. The following details from the Mimarial Bordelain, may interest our renders ; -" On the morning of the 21st February there was no appearance of any atmospheric change; shout 3 o'clock in the afternoon, however, a slight can tall, accompanied by a break from the south-east, which bles to strong aqualla at intervals, during which the heat was intense; the atmosphere because filled with variours, and the enercury in the harometer began to descend; between 4 and 5 o'clock it had fallon several degrees, and orders were given in the port for the ships to put to sea. A little before ansact the appearance of the weather was very threstening, the red and bronze-like light proceeding from the satting our was reflected on the clouds driven before the south-easter, blowing in heavy squalls, that got up the sea with the greatest rapidity; at 8 o'slock it blow in whirlwinds from the southward, lightning flow through the clouds, rain fell in torrents, the sea was frightful to look at; the hurronne was in full force. From that time until I in the morning the hatometer con-tinued to fall to three degrees below "tampest :" the wind had doubled in violence, the sex was forious, and the ravines and pond, or small lake near the town, swallon by the waters descending from the bills, overflowed in all directions. At this moment the town of Sr. Paul den in a frightful position, when auddenly the wind dropped to dead calm; this was the interval when it changed from the pouth to the east, then the waters, whose course had been impeded by the wind and waves of the sea, and had already overflowed the high road and the lower part of the town, found means to secupe; the pond was relieved of the superfluous water, and it. Paul was saved from immediation; but if the town was saved, such was not the case with the country, where on the morning of the 22d, from 7 till 9 the north-past wind priduced the most disastrougeffects. there follows a long detail of enquition-bridges carried away, augar-mois, houses, and cortages blown down, with the loss of many lives; chaputs, haspitals, and colleges anrooted and damaged; a small telet to the River des Ramports was nompletely covered by the water, and a person of the name of Gigant Henry and his family of 12 persons, swept off mto the sea. Revents by the Court.—A long and laborious investigation being now concluded, the Court feels it necessary to gubmit to like Exc. the Com.-in-Chief the following observation explanatory of the very unusual length to which the proceedings have been extended: Two adjects appear particularly to only for the expression of the Court's opinion, viz., the vagne and indistrict insture of some instances of the charges, and the indiscriminate aummoning of witnesses upon the proceedings, whose attendance has proved upon their examination, whose attendance has proved upon their examination, whose attendance than proved upon their examination, whose attendance than proved upon their examinations, meavedshis in support of charges of an indefinite nature embeasing a period of so many months. The Court expecially adverts to the fourthinstance of the second charge and the first instances of the acquaintance with the evidence adducible in their expect, or have been paid to the evidence adducible in their expect, or whether there existed safficient evidence to justify even pairing the princes upon his trial. Witness after witness has been brought forward for no apprexist resons, except that their acquaintance with the princes might possibly have emphisit them to any pomething to his diendvantage.

Thus has the time of the Court been econgoid during many days, not by inquiring into any apertific acts of ariminality, but in endeavouring to sinci from a succession of witnesses whether during several months of occasi intercourse with the prisoner, some expression may act have ecough him in their hearing directly or by implication direspectful towards the prisoner, whose suspicion that such had here the one, agreem to the court have affected the only original ground for exhibiting these instances of the charges.

The title-page of this work very fairly indicates its cha racter, and it may be further understood by the following concise statement of the translator, in his Prefuos :-

concise statement of the translator, in his Prefect :—
"Ignatius Palines, a Bohemian by birti, it would appear, undertook the journey to Kordofan, on commission, for a mercantile establishment at Cairo, in the hope of discovering bew channels of traffic with Central Africa. In the pursuit of his object, he sojourned longer in the country than any European before him; the information he fagushes respecting the present state of this province of Repyt in particular, and of the Belled floodan in general, may, therefore, be considered the most suthentile in extrance at the areaser time! Soudan in general, may, therefore, be considered the most authentic in existence at the present time."

Altogether, the work bears the impress of truth, and of an intelligent mind on the part of the author. The nature of the country, and the characters, habits, manners, and

We have space, however, for only one brief extract—a nurious and amusing description of the toileite of a Sheikill's wife, of the nouncid tribe, Bakkara. "The women and gris-ans very taknaive and friendly with those they know; they all shock hands with me, and made repeated inquiries about my health, and frequently saked me what I wished to est or drisk. The Life of Sir Hugh Pollucer, Bart., Admiral of the White, and Governor of Greenwich Hospital. By Robert M. Hunt, Esq. Chepman and Hall.

We are informed, in its Preface, that :-"This memoir would not have been undertaken, if the unformed calcumine which forced Paliting, in vindication of his own honour, to bring his Commander-in-Chief to trial, had not been studionally revived by the relative and biographer of Admiral Reppel, after their repose in judicious allence for more than half a contary."

It accounts to be approximated into in the days more that many

It assess to be sessewhat late in the day, now that pre-judice and party feeling have subsided (and never have those evile been more florestly prevalent than they were during the trials of Kappal and Palliner), to re-revive a subjest which, from its peculiarity of circumstances, must be always more or less painful to an English reader—to a reader justous of the Naval honour and glory of his country.

"Eggel was chosen to command the western equatron—the chief defence of the hingdom—at a time when the threatened coalescency of France and Spain, and the revolted our American colonies, placed the asfety of Greet Britain in the student petil. A French first of immenal magnitude was met off Breet by an English armament fully manned and equipped, equal to them at first, and greatly superior in metal on the day of highle, but after an indecisive action of a few hours' daration, the enomy were permitted to form their line unmoissted, and to return to port unpursued, whereby a momentum opportunity was sacrificed of capturing or destroying the great marine furce of France."

This, as has been intimated, was a truly painful ciroumstance to every Englishman of right feeling.

It is not our intention here to enter, or re-enter, even in the remotest degree, into the merits of the case. It is something, however, to be assured that the present biographer of Sir Hugh Palliser " is himself a souman, therefore in some degree qualified to form an opinion on the facts, and to discuss the merita of the proceedings of both Officers on that important oc-casion." We are also given to understand, that in addition to the family documents intrusted to him, he "was favoured by the Earl of Sandwich with several interesting papera from his valuable collections of manuscripts, topapers from his valuable collections of manuscripts, to-gether with the private letters of Pailiser to his illustrious ancestor, then Pirst Lord of the Admiralty." To the Hon. Sydney Herbert, Secretary of the Admiralty— to Henry Belferd, Esq., Keeper of the Records—to Sir Hunry Ellis and other Officers of the Ritish Museum— and to William Hamit Proand to William Upoott, Req., for the opportunity of re-ferring to the Anson MSS., and other original records in his care — Mr. Hunt acknowledges his obligation for much valuable assistance in the procecution of his labour. Thus it is evident, from these representations alone, that The Life of Sir Hugh Palliser' constitutes no unimportant addition to our stores of naval biography.

In his vinducation W filr Hugh Palliser, the wr performed the duty of an advocate; and if it may be thought that he has occasionally gone out of his way to attack Admiral Kappel, we must uscribe it to the honest seal which he appears to feel in the cause of his client.

Many of the those of even the best comfilation. Many of the biographical sketches, of which there are in the aggregate shout seventy or eighty, are the most happily condensed, the most lucidly characteristic we have ever met with. For instance, the virtues and the vices of the great Lord Bacon-elas, that the latter, ingratitude, avarice; and the receipt of bribes, should have been smonget the basest and the meanest to which poor human nature is incident! —ere brought within a single focus, in a manner strik-

"If the character of the writer may be judged by his works,—by the secience which the layers to weare into pictures of great events, and the spirit with think he portrays them.—to Colonel Napier.—as the deliwing pellenges from he history bear with most—belong devotion to woman, undesanted courage utterly free from equality or pursonal hearted, courtery to examine, and sympathy with every gallant notion, whatever the country or appreciation of the hero."

"Without looking farther, this fine character is abundantly borns out by Colonel Napier's admirable letter—as latter breathing the very soul of chivalric honour—to the Duchess of Abrance—from the Preface to the first volume of his History.

With chromological lists of authors prefixed, this hand-some and compact volume, containing affatter to the ex-

RESPECTIVE the second Part of this publication, we can but repeat the praise awarded to the first; that, with its decorative vignation of somery, costume, and situation, and its various-coloured erabasque borders and orniments, it is extremely alegant and benefits that the portreit sions (Madema Persiani, an Recine, in the "Ba Seville," engraved by Mote. from a maintime be sions (Madama Persiani, as Norina, in the "Barber of Soville," engraved by Mote, from a painting by R. We may just hint, however, that the eyes of our charming contatries, as presented by Mr. Smith, are somewhat larger than those with which nature has favelued the original. The story of the opera is very amusingly sketched, CULINEL LEACH, C.S., ON EXAMACES.

To the Editor of the Nonel and Military Genetic.
Sin,—I was glad to see, in your Paper of the 25th of May, an article on a subject to which I have repeatedly May, as article on a supers to wasse a have repeatedly endeavoured to draw attention, vis.: the importance of reducing as much as possible the great weight carried by the Infantry soldier. Offering suggestions on this or any other point connected with the appointments, arms, and organisation of our troops, must be a unsiese and hopeless undertaking, as long as the consideration is, not whether the alterations proposed are likely to add to their efficiency in the field, but how they will affe amouncy in the folia, but now any will asset them whilst stationed in gurrisons, at home or shroad,—a rock on which we have too often split. I am perfectly well con-vinced that his load might be somiderably diminished, and that his efficiency, instead of being impaired, would be much increased by it. When fully squipped for the field with musket and bayones, amountain, knapack, belts, great-cost, blanket, canton with some water in it, and a haverack containing three days' rations of meal and bread, he carries upwards of sistly pounds, in which are not included his cap, boots, and wearing apparel. I would, therefore, strongly recommend those who are scentical as to his load being too great, to shoulder a musket, strap on their own persons the different items above named, and then acriqualy consider whether the powers of the strongest man must not be severely tried by marching hour after hour with such a load, under a burning sun, or knee-deep in mud in heavy rain, and, after flattering himself that his day's work is nearly at an end, and the brouse at hand, he in ordered to advance some miles farther, for the purpose of attacking the enemy's rear-guard; posted, perhaps, on ground so steep and rigged, that a cat would be puzzled to ramble over it. Those simple feats are sometimes performed on, half rations, and frequently without any; and my old Patinsular contrades know that I have not coloured the picture too highly, but merely described what we have too often witnessed ever to forget.

The number of men who on different occasions during the war in the Peninsula were obliged to leave their ranks from sheer exhaustion, baffles all calculation; and it is no exaggeration to say, that had their muskets, and their load altogether been much lighter, thousands who dropped by the road-aids and were randered for a time hors de combut. would have been able to keep their places, and take a part n many encounters with the enemy, in which they were utterly incapable of joining.

It should be remembered that exertions almost supernatural are frequently required from Infantry; battles on which the fate of kingdoms depend may be irretrievably lost by a column arriving too late at a certain point, in consequence of the men being overloaded and jaded, and unable therefore to reach their destination at the moment intended. "It is the power of marching," says Marshal Ney, in his instructions to his Officers, "which constitutes the strength of Infantry; and enterprises which seem to present the greatest difficulties become comparatively casy by the advantage accruing from rapid marches." This is no mean authority; and I would ask in what manner the "nower of murching" can be attained so effectually, and with such certainty, as by arming the soldier with a light musket, and taking every ounce weight off his shoulders that can possibly be dispensed with? It would be highly desirable that a committee, consisting of old and ex-perienced Officers, should be assembled, and their wits ast to work to ascertain what portion of the (so styled) necessaries right be dispensed with; and the opinions of Intelligent Non-commissioned Officers and privates would be extremely valuable; for who could throw a light on the question half so well as old campaigners, who have marched and fought year after year with the said sixty pounds on their backs? It would be almost an insuit to ask any Military men of common understanding, if he does not consider that this subject merits attention a hundred fold more than many of the frivolous and unimportant matters to which, unfortunately, so much valuable time is devoted every day. With many this reasoning will avail but little; for old, prejudices are not easily overnome, nor can I expect that men will all at once feel interested in a subject on which they have never yet, per-haps, bestowed a single thought. With a view, however, of proving my position a tenable one, I shall call to my aupport a few facts, which "are stubborn things." When our Army landed in Portugal on the 1st of August, 1808, the men's kaspancks, and a considerable part of their coutents, were ordered to be left on board the transports: tents, were organicated to be lett on board the transports; nor did they see them again until they reached Lishou, after the convention of Cintra. In the great-cont were inclosed one shirt, one pair of shear, one pair of stockings, a hand-towel, a bit of soap, razor, comb, and shaving-box; and the brushes, usually encried by each man, were divided between several. I should like to ask any one who belonged to that Army if, on arriving at Lisbou, there was anything in its appearance denoting a want of cleanliness and umariness, although the men were nearly, if not quite, two months without their knapssoks?

evening before our Army commenced its march from Talavera to the southern frontier of Cortagal, Gen. Crawfurd, having the retreat of Sir John Moore's Army to Corunna and Vigo fresh in his recullection, took it on himself to order the men of the Light Brigade either to burn or leave on the camp-ground a certain portion of the contents feare on the camp-ground a certain portion of the comments of their knapsacks. At this distance of time I do not perfectly recollect of what that portion consisted; but amongst other things, shirts and brushes strewed the ground in abundance. Now, sithough my logic may not carry with it much weight, or shake the belief of men biguted to old hackneyed systems, the two instances 1 have quoted will possibly have a tendency that way.

I have often expressed a belief that it would be advis-able in future compagns to do away with the blanket and to make the great-coat suffice for all purposes; and the countless maledictions and executions I have beard uttered by the men sgainst the former, and the number of fathoms deep in the Bay of Biscay they often wished it, convinced me very many years ugo that to discontinue it would be wise, as no advantage according from it in the camp or bivotack could compensate for the labour of the feiler Lingto Retired Captain 2 Was this contemporarying so much additional weight. In the two last plated in the Order in Council of 1840? Please, Sir, campaigns in the Peninsula, (1813 and 1814), when the large camp-kettles were done away with, and tents carried for each company instead, the blankets or great costs were ordered to be given into store; one, it must be cancluded, being considered sufficient. Of the two, in my humble opinion, the great-coat is decidedly the best; for the soldier, when on sentry at night or in tempestuous weather, can put on his accountrements over it, and move with freedom: whereas if covered with a blanket, he must prowit mide if suddenly obliged to advance or retrest from his post by any movement of the enemy's pickets.

Ere I conclude, allow me, Sir, once more to observe that I have frequently, in the columns of your Paper, proposed that in lieu of the blanket, a piece of light waterproof cloth or Mackintosh's composition, sufficiently long to cover the feet of the soldier thoroughly when lying down, might be affixed by books or looms to the bottom of the great-coat; and when he is on sentry, this cloth could be turned up and laid flat under the skirt of it, so as not to interfere with his walking. When rolled up, the cont might not look quite so neat and pretty as without it; but the comfort of dry and, comparatively; warm feet in the wet bivouck, ought to be a much weightier consideration. This appendage to the cost, if not considered necessary in foreign or home gerrisons, might be kept in store, and not issued until the the field.—I am, &c. J. LEAGH.

RETIRED NAVAL OFFICERS.
To the Editor of the Naval and Miliary Gasetta.
—A few weeks since there appeared in the Naval and Military Gazette a letter from a Commander, calling the attention of the Service to the amount of pay granted to Retired Captains, viz., 10s, tid. per day (the same as that of Retired Cuntains of the Ordnance and Marine Corps), and advocating a considerable increase, viz. to 15s. per day. I do not see that in any fairness such a pretension could be maintained, seeing that the hundred senior Captains on the Active List have but 14s. 6d, some of those veterans having held the rank 36 years; but there might be a satisfactory compromise come to. The junior Captains have but 10s. 6d. per day half pay, but as they advance their pay increases, and in rank they advance rapidly, acquiring that of Colonel after three years. Not so the Retired Captain. He cannot supire to further rank or encolument, and it would not be con-ceding too much to allow him 12s. per day, and to his widow, should be leave one, the same pension as awarded to the widow of a junior Captain, viz., 80f. instead of 75f.—a mean increase of 5f. beyond that of a Commander. This distinction is as unworthy of our rulers as the increase is paltry. On the same principle 1 differ from my brother Officer in his suggesting a second class of Retired Captains at a different rate of pay, because in asking too much one gets nothing; but on this point, as on the other, I would come to a comprewith his views, and I would suggest that the tirement of old Commanders for the brief period they may be expected to enjoy it, considering their advanced ago, should be rendered more worthy the Service by increasing the number from 50 say to 80, or 100; by esta-blishing their pay at 12s, per day, and the pension of dows the same as Junior Captains; and to such Officers as accept the retirement concede the same privi-lege that has been accorded to the "Superannuated Admirals," that of being placed on the list of Captains with an asterisk prefixed to their names, as is the case with the Admirals, and of gradually rising on that List as the non-effective Admirals do, it being understood that no increase is to take place either in their pay beyond 12s. per day, or in the pension of their widows beyond 80% per annum. At present the retirement is rendered as humiliating as possible, and is really not worth acceptance.

When the Committee that was appointed to inquire into the grievances of the United Service onme to die the case of the Communders, it was objected that the increase of pay—id. per day—was miserably small when the alteration recommended was a rationment (in fact, a final settlement for long and faithful service), and this objection was meanly met my one or our admirate, who stated that the retirement " would affect only the Senior Officers on the Lut, who would not expect promotion in any other way, and that by giving the Retired Officers the same pay as the Junior Captains on the Active List they could have no cause of complaint." There was no Commander present on the Committee, Sir, neither was these in the House of Commons when the Report was presented there, to advocate the rank he filled, and to comment on the continuations remark respecting the probable premation of the Officers under consideration ; so their cause withered to that as it does in very other consideration. It being, however, stated by those our kind superiors and guardians, that the promo-tion in question was intended to apply " to the Senior Commanders on the List," will you inform me how it Commanders on the List," will you inform me how it came about that a Retired Commander of 1831 was was a solid benefit and advantage conferred on the Officer that obtained it, as it gives him a present increase of pay of 2s. per day, and for his widow, if he shall leave one, it secures an addition of 15s, per annum in her pen-sion. Thus, Sir, to the Retires Commander of twelve years' rank, as such, is conceded a most unjust preference years rank, as such, is consected a most unjust preservice and important advantage ever Officers on the Active List, the senior of whem, awaiting the step he has attained, has held the rank nearly threat times as long; and if this class of Officer is to be included in the promotions to Retired Captain, which are "like angels" visits." Officers in my position on the Llat skin never expect to arrive at their turn. It would be gratifying to have the merits of this case, which many of my brother Officers agree in considering as even worse than "too bad," fairly explained. I fear, however, that like all instances of the nfair exercise of power, the only solution it will admit of will be found in the old adage of "might is right," and that now as ever the weak and undefended must go to the wall.—1 am, &c., Devon, 25th May, 1844. ORDNAMCE CORPS.

Rl. Artiliery.—Col. Lacy, of the carriage department, and Capt. Palliser, of the proof department, attended at the butt at the Rl. Arsenal, to witness six rounds being fired from a 56-pounder gus. 10 feet long, weighing 85 awt., Monck's pattern, mounted on a trevering platform, to be fitted on the quarter-deck of the Dodains. The platform is 16 feet long, moving on a pivot about two feet and a half from the elevated end, and the carriage on which the gun is mounted, traversing on the other and upon a brass circle to be isid upon deck in that form, at 113 feet from the pivot, to snable it to be freed in any direction. The resoil of the gun carriage to-day was very satisfactory, the first round b feet, the second 5 feet b antistactory, the first round b reet, the second b reet inches, the third 5 feet 8 inches, the fourth, with the acrews loase, 8 feet 3 inches, the fifth, with the acrews partially fixed, 5 feet 10 inches, and the sixth, 6 feet. The simplicity of the platform is such, that the gun, although of such great weight, is run up to its firing position with the greatest case

The Nautilus, No. 12 transport, was towed down the river from Deptford on Wednesday, and moored opposite the Rl. Arsenal. On Thursday the baggage of Maj. Hornshy's company, 3d batt, was nut on board, and next day, 3d of the property of Lieut, Gran, Sec. Lieut, Gray, eight non-commissioned officers, seventy gunners and dricign. non-commissioned amoers, seventy gunners and drivers, one drummer, with fourteen women, besides children, embarked for a passage to St. Helena, to relieve Capt. Kinatchbull's company on duty at that station since 16th Nov. 1835. The bandwigthe Ri. Artillery accompanied the company to the place of embarkation. Lieut.-Col. Fraser, appointed to command the Ri. Artillery at St. Helena, vice Lieut.-Col. Darby, retired upon full pay, proceeds in the Nautilus to assume the duties of the atation. station.

Col. Paterson, Col. Lacy, Lieut.-Col. Dancey, Lieut.-Col. Dundas, Lieut.-Col. Chalmer, Lieut.-Col. Sweeting, and Capt. Palliser, attended yesterday in the Blarshes to witness experiments with an invention submitted to the members of the select committee by Mr. Mersh, chemist, connected with the Royal Arsenal. The invention ex-perimented with aquasited of three different kinds of application of simple substances to the common fasce used for igniting the powder contained in shells intended to burst when fired from large pieces of ordnesses. to burst when fired from large pieces or oranamos, the description used on this occasion being one 68, pounder and two 32-pounder guns. Mr. Marsh meked no secret of the means by which he expects to regulate the bursting of the shells when they strike the object almed at, and one of the modifications of the minimish was now affantism one only of these his principle was very effective, one only out of pine shells fired with meal powder caps burnting at about 150 yards from the mouth of the guo, the other eight entering the but, and exploding immediately on passing through, tearing the massive timbers in their progress into hundreds of fragments, some of them very large pieces. The auc-cass of Mr. Marsh's discovery is owing to the application of Jeffrey's marine give to attach the caps filled with meal powder to the fusee, the whole operation being very simple and easily understood, without the slightest risk being apprehended when moving the shalls about or loading, as apprehension when moving the shells made to explode on the percussion principle. The whole of the shells fired with the two other modifications of Mr. Margh's discovery burst, but were not so regular or cartain in exploding at the requisite period, as those used with caps filled with mest powder.

Waiting on his Raiser, and several members of the suite of the King, arrived at the Royal Arsenal at 11 o'clock, A.M. The Royal party, on alighting, were relevived by Maj., Tan. Bit H. D. Roya, Col. Cackburn, Col. Lacy, and Col. Turner, of the Rl. Artitlery; Col. Sir George Hoste, of the Rl. Ragineers; Lieur. Col. Danvey, Lieur. Col. Dandas; Lieur. Col. Chalmer, Maj. Saudilands, Brigade Mejor Cuppage, Capt. Palliser, Capt. Frazer, Capt. and Adj. Taylor, Capt. and Adj. Cockburn, and Lieut. th Hon. R. C. H. Spencer. At the foundry, Lieut. Col. Dundas conducted the King over the whole of the department, including the buildings for boring and polishing large pieces of Ordusnee by powerful machinery constructed by Mapier. On leaving the foundry, his Majestywas received at the private entrance of the laboratory department by Col. Cockburn and Lieut.-Col. Dansey, and was conducted to the rooms appropriated to making precussion caps, and his Majesty witnessed with apparent interest the whole of the process by which this investion is accomplished and perfected in great numbers, in an incredibly short space of time, by hand machinery worked by boys. The copper used for making percussion caps and his machinery worked by him to another who outs it out with astogishing rapidity into the shape of Maltese crosses. These are passed to some other boys, who form them into the shape of percussion caps, afterwards smoothed and polished, and then filled with the igniting composition. When dry they are packed up in cases containing 780 in each, the number sent out for service with every 590 ball or hlank cartridges. His Majesty next inspected the making of musket balls by compression, by a powerful band machine. The King then visited the model rooms, containing specimens of fire ships, chain, and every other description of shot and shells used in the naval and military services of this country, and pertions of every species of material used in making gunpowder, and apecimens of that imand shells used in the naval and military services of this country, and portions of every species of material used in making gunpowder, and specimens of that im-portant combustible in all its various stages, with mills for mixing and granulating it, and a small piece of ord-nance for testing its strength when finished. After a short visit to the boye making ball and blank cartridges, the King was conducted by Col. Lacy over the wheel-wright's shop, where the steam machinery for boring saves a great amount of manual labour, and performs the work with great precision. His Majesty was evidently the work with great precision. His Mnjesty was evidently the work with great precision. His Majesty was evidently surprised to witness the corrections and limited space of time required to form lance-poles 10 ft. long, and about 1 junch to 2 inches in diameter, without a hairs-breadth difference in the diameter throughout their whole length. His Majesty also witnessed the powerful plaining-machine at wolk, invented by Brahma, for planing end reducing the the length of the language o inages, and the terminates of every description used in the Ordanice department. His Majusty was received at the storehouses by Mr. Chestham, chief storehouses by Mr. described, nd the storehouses are storehoused as the storehouse of the storehouses are storehoused as the storehouse of the storehous Arsenal. His Majeaty seemed to pay great attention to a light howitzer 4 2-5th inches in dismeter of bore, and a light howitzer 4 2-3th nignes in magneter or sore, and mounted on a saddle, with the requisite appendages, similar to those conveyed on the backs of mules across the mountains during the late Syrian Warfare. His blajesty proceeded to the garrison and visited the aplendid Mess-room, now nearly finished, having been mountain anticommunical with very charts. greatly enlarged and consumited with very chasts designs. His Majesty having visited the Royal Repository grounds and Rotunds, and the various descriptions of arms and models of dockyards and fortifications, and other objects of interest, at half-past one o'clock preceded to firenwich Flospital, where his Majesty was conducted over the whole establishment by Admiral fir Robt. Stopford, Governor of the Hospital, and by the heads of the various departments. His hisjesty, after viewing the Hospital, honoured the Governor with his company at a dejiment. The King, attended by his suite, went to Woulwich dockyard, and afterwards associated to vigit the Royal Hospital at Chelsen. The King inspected the boys of the Royal Military Asylum, at Chelsen. of arms and models of dock sards and fortifications, and Chelses.

immediately sent in various directions after the quents, but it was not until near midday that one of them was found flourishing his bayonet in Addis-hill, Doctors' Campaons, by Polico-censtable Newshem, who endeavoured to persuade him to accompany him to the station-house. He became, however, exceedingly outrageous, and threatened the life of the Polico-constable, who being an expect person slipped behind him and punioused his arms. The other two men were in the course of Wednesday arening and Thursday morning discovered in remote parts of London, and conveyed to the guard-room of the Tower-barracks, where Renderson is also confined. The offence will be punished with great acverity.

Let Foot, let Batt., Depot—The depot of this distinguished corps, under the command of that vaterae Officer, Major Deane, K. H., was inspected by Mejer-General Lordownes, K. C. B., at Trales, on the 14th inst. His Lordship made a most minute and thorough inspection, and quents, but it was not until near midday that one of them

ship made a most minute and thorough inspection, and expressed himself highly satisfied with the olexoliness and soldier-like appearance of the men, and the precise and steady manner in which they performed their several evolutions ; their Light Infantry movements, which were closely observed by the Major-General, elicited his highest eulogiums,—the manual and platoon exergise, which the dappt was put through by Capt. Ormsby, sould not be excelled. As a finale, and while they were acting as Light troops, the alarm sounded, and they dashed off pallmell to the defence of herracks, actonishing and putting into bedily fear the fair spectators who were then assem-bled; the next moment every man was found at his post, and the loop-holes, &c. &c., lined with brave hearts and British happases. The Major-General, who, no doubt, was unprepared for this ruse, manifested great pleasure at the electity of the movement and the disposition of the men, also at the able arrangements made for this import-ant matter by Major Deans. On the assemble sounding, they moved steadily in double-time, in sections, to the slarm-post and formed column, after which they were dismissed. After the inspection, his Lordship, Staff Officers, and a party of ladies and gentlemen, partock of luncheon at Major Desne's quarters. The Major-General next stated the hospital and schools, and then went to the orderly-room, where he inspected the Regimental and Companies' books, with all of which he was much pleased; he said he was much gratified to find the depot in such a high state of discipline, and that its exterior as well as interior economy was highly creditable to Major Deane, and hoped he (Major D.) would accept his best thanks for his seal and exertions in bringing it to such proficiency. In the evening, his Lordship and Aida-de-Camp, with several other guests, were enterthined by the Officere and their muss. At 8 o'clock, the Serjeants, with a few their muse. At 6 o'clock, the Serjeants, with a few friends, sat down to a sumptuous dinner, and continued to enjoy themselves with song and muth until chanticlest gare warning of approaching day, when their revol ceased, and they moved to their respective rooms, highly satisfied with the conviviality of the evening. I never can forget the autisfaction Sir Edward appeared to feel upon that glorious occasion; and will vesture to say, was the happiest days of his life. DEPTYOND, June 17 .- The Paroupine steam-vessel, 4 beautiful specimes of a little war steamer, the production of Mr. Oliver William Lang, was named by Miss Hill, daughter of Captain Superintendent Sir John Mill, Kat., and launched from Hel Majesty's dockyard, Deptiord, at half-past 2 o'clock, r.m., to-day in the presence of a large assemblage of the most respectable inhabitants of Dept-ford and its vicinity, who cheered enthaniantically as the

the Admiralty flag, and two Union flags waving in the breeze from the flag-staffe erected on board. Mr. O. W. Leng is a son of Mr. Oliver Lang, Master Shipwright at Wholwich dockyard, who constructed the first steamwassel for the Royal Navy of Great Britain many years. agn, at a time when steam navigation at see was considered to be impossible to accomplish with a vessel of the magnitude requiring 80 horse-power to work her engines. But so auccessful has been the result of the various sizes of atenm-vessels built from the designs of Mr. Lang, that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty ordered an immense steamer, to be named the Torrible, to be built on his principle at Deptford dockyard, and to be fitted with engines of 800 heree-power. This vessel is now fast progressing towards being ready for launching, and on examining her on the slip adjoining the one from which the Percupins was launched to-day, the strength and security of her frame-work appear to be so great that she will be the strongest vessel ever built, and spect that are will be the strongest vessel over built, and her simbers are connected in so substantial a manner that she would flost without any planking. This vessel as she approaches to being finished cannot full to be a lion amongst the sight-sweing inhabitants of the metropolia and strangers visiting town, and will prove, when ready for sea, one of England's best bulwarks. The Porsupins was built expressly to fit the engines formerly used in the Black Bagis, before the latter vessel was lengthened, and they are of 130 horse-power, by Messrs. Maudalay, Sons, and Plaid. The following are the dimensions of the Percupine, and she is to be commissioned for service by Capt. Bullock :--

CHATRAM DOCKYAND, June 20.—The two experimental 12 gun brigs, built in this yard, the Mutine, by Mr. Flagham, master builder, and the Espitale, by Mesare. The Espidgic and the Musine are very dissimilar in their appearance, which is attributable to the very different appearance, which is actroucate to the very unretuni-principle and consideration by which the constructors have been guided in propering their designs. The En-picyle sits of the water very nearly according to the tries at which she is idented to sail, while the Matine, owing to the different arrangements of her storage, appears in her present state to be more by the head than the beerver would suppose to be desirable. practical construction of this latter vessel, according to common report, is calculated not only to make her lighter in her hull, but to lessen more particularly the weight of her upper works, which must be an advantage to her in her forthcoming trial of sailing. The Esployle nevertheless appears to be the favourite ship with all practical men. There is certainly something very original in her appearance. The Cruiser, 16-gun brig was put out of dook on Tucaday, and taken alongside the sheer hulb, and her masts and topmasts were put in, and she was taken into the same dock as the above two vessels came out. The riggers were immediately put on her, and commenced rigging her directly. It is expected she will be ready for sailing in about a tortnight, when it is understood she will join the experimental equadron. The Relia 10-gun brig, was taken into juck yesterday to complete her fittings for commission. The Reliabilities steamfrigute is nearly completed, and is now being painted; she will be launched on Tuesday the 2d of July next, when she will be taken immediately round to the East India Docks to be fitted for her angines. Woolwich, June 16.—The Pirefly strain-vessel, Capt. F. W. Beschey, was at Woolwich yesterday, under orders to be paid in advance, on Wednesday neat, to resume the survey which Capt. Beechey was employed upon last scanon in the Lucifer steam-vessel; but in consequence of subsequent instructions, the Firefly started to-day for Portsmouth, to await further orders, which will be forwarded to her at that port. Previous to leaving Woolwich, the Firefly received stores on board from the Royal Arsensi, and the general impression amongst the craw was, that they were to sonvey a Queen's messenger with depatches from Portsmouth to Tangiers, or that the stores they had taken on board would be re-shipped for that destination. The Dadalus, 42 gan frigate. from Sheerness to Woolwich, to be fitted with a spar from Sheerness to Woolwich, to be fitted with a spar dock, is fast appreaching towards completion, and when ready for sea will have a powerful and effective armament. PRESENT STATE AND PUTURE PROSPECTS OF THE BRITISE NAVY.—BY A POST CAPTAIR. [Per the " Naval & Millory (lasette, ") (Continued from No. 297, p. 272.)

In my opinion there are certain local advantages indis-peasably necessary to be a great Marktime power.

1st. The power must either is an island or an isthmus insulated from rich and fertile countries, to which easy access cannot be attained.

2d. The country must be fully peopled; a

3d. It is necessary to have the command of great colonies, inhabited by and supplied from her own stock.

The first will necessarily force an extended acquaint

d acquaintance with the sea, the only high-road by which to travel to gain wealth and importance in the seale of nations, and reby facilitate a knowledge of the best field upon x to protect the dignity and independence when the position

The second will necessitate a scafaring life to a large portion of the population, whose only capital is their capability to labour. And the third, which will be formed by the surplus population, will compose a portion of an empire, and establish depots at every corner of the globe, to nourish and increase a hardy race, always at hand to protect and defend their native country.

Without these combined causes and advantages to influence the formation of an elastic external force, and which can only be elastic by the possession of a nursery from out of which the required Supplies needful to main tain a great aggressive war can be drawn, no continental againess are properly applied, successfully to contend for Maritime superiority.

We may fearlessly point back to the page of history for corroboration of this vaunt; and it will be observed. that, although we were not always as we are now, the first nation in political power and wealth, yet our Naval superiority has always been confessed and asserted, and the right of priority to the English cruiser was ne-knowledged by the salute of the flag of other nations. If, during a few brief periods in many contarios, the Naval sceptre has more than once trembled in our grasp, the cause can be traced not to the greater Naval efficiency and power of our opponents, but to a distracted Government, an incapable Minister, or apathy for the moment on the part of the people at home; but it will be also seen that no sooner was the inertpess thrown off and new vigour imparted sooner was the inertness thrown off and new vigour imparted to the councils of the Sovereign, than all the prior advantages of the enemy gained by being the first assailant in the field and the best prepared, were after the first few grest actions lost. Yet the insgnitude of the danger we incurred at those several specie has, I trust, warned and convinced the country that on the proper maintenance of the Navy will depend the future greatness of England, as her past power (as history points out) rose or fell in proportion as her Navy was festured or neglected.

To this complete construction of men-of-war have all Navise arrived; so that Navai thetics are reduced to a science, and war depends not only upon the knowledge and experience of the Admirals and bravery of the men, but upon the possession of the various material to keep up a continued supply for the perpetual and great demand constantly called for even by the successful.

As a professional main vanisations to review this immore-

As a professional man venturing to review this impor-int subject, I see, in the endaurour to graft that one tant subic tant subject, I feel, in the endeavour to graft that con-fidence on the minds of my readers, that I myself fully entertain, that I may be regarded with distruct, as a pertial reasoner upon the power and value of the service I belong to ; and I freely admit, if I had only assumptive argument to offer, the idea would give me some pain; but I triumphantly point to this subject, as perhaps the soli-tary exception where fond hopes and appraisions are fully borne up and supported by the criftence of history. We see it there written, that when our result was law and our borne up and supported by the evilence of history. We see it there written, that whee our credit was low and our power weak, Louis XIV., by financial sacrifices, obtained a great numerical superiority; but one battle, that of La Hogus, in 1692, was sufficient to estimate our ascendancy. Sweden, under Charles XII., put to see 24 sail of the Line; after that monarch's death four or ave retten hulks and a few frigates and gun-boats were all that remained. Even Holland, from the days of Van Tromp, in 1683, to the defect of De Winter by Dumman in 1797, while possessed of wealth, communes, and accounter, could not assend of wealth, commerce, and actoutes, could not replenieb the dispersion of her axeelent seamen, or the se of her ships at Camperdown and the Texal. Spain, in 1796 had 57 tail of the Line alone; she go-vermed an empire in the West then, from beyond the Tropic of Canonr to boyond the Tropic of Caprisors; her children revelled in lazy luxury, procured from the mines of her distant colonies; the trads bytween the countries supplied her seamen-long unrivalled in science and enterprise-but yet, after the destruction of her last great Floor at Trafaigar, and the independence of her Colonies in 1824, her Navy has been no more heard of; and now two old line-of-battle-ships, bull a done frigates and brigs, are all that remain of the once magnificent and formidable

Lastly, poor but gallant Denmark has mover risen from the blow that her ill judged ambition to become a Naval Power crushed down upon her at Copenhagen. Doubtless, if we ever eater upon languid and ill-conducted wars; if the hand at the heat will also be conducted ware; if the hand at the helm vacillates, we shall not only fall to attain our object, but aid the improvement of our adversaries by exercising their skill and increasing their confidence. This is the buly, the hight, the improbable risk likely to endangir our adversaries. But when England's great resources are viewed by the eye of a profused statement, and wisided with energy and talent, they are insurmountable.

It is true that the best arrangements have sometimes refacilyled, and that the grandest dendiptions have sometimes proved infiliations; that many great ministers have loss proved infiliations; that many great ministers have sometime proved infiliations; that many great ministers have loss proved infiliations; that many great ministers have sometime proved infiliation at resolve, the talent to plan, and anorei courage to carry into execution vast modertakings, which have been absoluted and disfemilial which least appected; had the resolution to resolve, the talent to plan, and movel courage to carry into execution that maderakings, which have been checked and disfamilied which least expected to bet all such reverses may generally be traced to university dispondency, unjust impetionce, to a want of authoritions for the undertaking, and to a certain apathy be the part of the people to deeds of giory and national leabour.

MEDICAL OFFICERS OF THE ARMY To the Etter of their and Military Guarlie.

But and Notice of their and Military Guarlie.

But and Notice of their and American as short time bines, yet remained as their Discours; who had served upwards of thirty years, an increased retirement, and that he had handed pover the papers to the new Secretary at. War. I sincerely hope such is not the case, for if the Doctore are promised an extra sixpence after forty years, they will nearly all wait and serve for it, although they have not a leg to atand on. Now if the Secretary-at-War was to do as Mr. Guthric advised, when he was examined by the Military Commission—he said "Give the Ragimental Surgeon a right to retire after 25 years' full pay service on 15s, per diem, as most of them are in that time nearly done up, and then, no matter how long they remain, let the retired allowance be still the same, unless they our manage to get promo-tion: thete are some, of course, who are well and strong, and fit for service, will wait for promotion, which must come in time, but the slow coaches and the invalids will all go, as most of them, after their 25 years' agrees, are then close to 50 years of age," If the Secretary at-Waz was to adopt such a plan, the Army would then have a much store efficient class of Doctors, who would be fit for any service. I beg, in conclusion, to remerk, there is now in the different ranks apwards of seventy Medical Officets who are more than thirty years on full pay, only just making to see what the new Secretary-et-War will do for them.

CLAIMS OF THE OLD LIEUTENANTS, R.N.
To the Editor of the Name and Millory Seaste.

Bin.—I have seen many discussions in your valuable and interesting Gasette on the rank and title of Equite, and it has been by no means proved to my satisfaction that Lieutenants of the Navy are by law entitled to use it; in fact, it appears doubtful who is, and who is not. Now, Sir, there appears anaptrut who so, and who is not. Now, Sir, there appears to me and others a very charpmenthed of rewarding the Old Lieutenants, a war-medal baving been refused. Why not make Esquires of the Bath 1—it would at least show the world that however unfortunate they have been in seeing their shipmates promoted over their heads, they had not diagraced themselves. I, Sir, am one of those unfortunates; all my old meanmaters are either dead or promoted; and, however confident I am that I have not acied wrong, I feel my being still on the liet of Lieutenants a sort of diagrars, superially when in a tea-port town. And in talking over ald times, how utten must duting here followed my relieu must duting here followed my relieu must duting here followed my relieu must duting here followed my relieu must duting here followed my relieu must duting here followed my relieu must duting a lieu must determ must duting here followed my relieu must determ must determ my relieu must determ my relieur must determ must determ my relieur must determ my relieur my relieur must determ my relieur my in it that with all your services you were passed over?"
Let Sir George Cockburn say what he will, in answer to Sir C. Napier's arguments, about Lieutesants being better off then in his younger days; they are still Lieutesants, while he is an Admiral, a Right Honourable, and G.C.B.; had he still remained a Lieutesant with the rank of Commender, he would tell a very different tale. I do not wish, Sir, to take any runk or honour from him, but to have justice done to my own grade, . It is those who are left in the rank of Lieutenant, after having done their duty, that I plead for—the old were Lieutenants, who have duly, that I plead for the social hour, and the sharers in many a peril and danger, with these who show hold the rank of Admiral and Captain. Surely at times even Admirals and Captains must "remomber the days of their youth," and the companions they were latimate with as boys; they cannot all have drunk of the "waters of oblivion." The Whige made a great mintake in doing marking for the ald More tellogies, who would then have nothing for the eld Wer Officers, who would then have given them their votes at any rate; and the Torice are ing the same thing. In my own case I may well say b's plague on both your houses," and I have no doubt others are in the same situation. As Oas Lorr. June 17.

A Serjeant-Major who makes use of his "little brief authority" to lower instead of to uphold the situation of the Serjeants, is very unfit for his post; and if this conduct should be repeated, we advice this Correspondent to request the protection of the Captain of his company in bringing the matter before the Commanding Officer.

Naval & Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1844.

Trus Journal has, for many years, directed public attention to the enormous length of Foreign Service demanded from our soldiers, especially those serving in the East Indies. Is it not equivalent to transportation for life to send regiments for more than twenty years to India? What hope can the private soldier or his relations f his linking to coture to bis major MIG! now three regiments of Infantry under orders for India, and we would respectfully suggest that the present would be a most favourable opportunity of stating, by regulations, that corps should henceforth be relieved from India after ten years' service, as regiments now are from Ceylon and other stations cast of the Cape. Indeed, it must strike all who reflect on the subject, that a very unequal, and, apparently, unjust measure of service is dealt out to the regiments serving of the continent of India. These corps embark nearly one thousand men in nine companies, leaving a skeleton company at home for recruiting. Let us compare with this the case of regiments serving in Ceylon, and all our other colonies. These corps embark six of their ten companies, leaving four complete companies at home But the difference does not stop here in the degree of Foreign service exacted from the regiments in India and elsewhere. The regiments in India serve twenty years and upwards, with all their Officers and men, except one Captain and a Recruiting Staff, forming a company in the Provisional Battalion; while all the regiments serving in the Colonies leave a Major, four Captains, four Lieutenants. and four Ensigns, with four companies of Non-Commissioned Officers and privates in the United Kingdom. The case is one of extreme hardship on the regiments in India, and felt chiefly because the hardship is borne by them alone, other regiments having only ten, years of Foreign service.

That we do not oversite the services exacted from regiments in India, we have only to point out the services of the five last regiments which have landed from India. The 16th left England in August, 1819, and returned home in April, 1841; the 6th left England in July, 1821, and returned by wings in the course of 1842; the 49th, 41st, and 44th, embarked from England between December, 1821, and June, 1822, and only landed in this country last year. 'Tis true, that an error caused the return home of the 26th Regiment in 1843, which went to India in May, 1828; but by this more timely relief the 55th, which went abroad in December, 1821, has suffered, not yet having arrived in England from China.

What, sgain, are the services of the three regiments now about to be relieved by the 53d, 60th, and 61st? The 13th Regiment went to India is January, 1823—their services are too well known not to be properly appreciated by the Public—but that regiment cannot reach England before 1845. The 3d and the 40th also embarked in 1823, and they cannot be landed in England during the present year.

We beg most argently to cell attention to these facts. Sad, indeed, is the prospect for Officers and men now leaving this country, with twenty years and more of Tropical service before them. Most assuredly, our soldiers have a fair claim to embark for India on the same terms of service abroad, as their fellow-soldiers ordered to the Colonies. If obstacles exist to the earlier relief of regiments from India, those obstacles are not so great that they cannot be removed. We most firmly believe that the most rigid seenomists in the Mouse of Commons would support a measure to relieve their fellow-countrymen from a banishment of more than twenty years from their native land. We heard of a Rotation system for regiments east of the Cape, and we would gladly bail its adoption; but we again say, let ten years be the rule for the duration of Foreign Service for all.

The changes of stations of the corps next for duty in Ireland, depend on the embarkations of the 60th 1st Battalion, the 61st, and the 53d Regiments from that country, preparatory to their proceeding to India. We have been informed that the 82d and 73d will be moved to Ireland in the course of a short time, to replace 60th and 61st; but that as yet no arrangements have been made to relieve the 53d. The arrival of the 68th from Canada, and of the 55th from China, will probably decide the matter by moving two Regiments from the South of England into Wales and Lancashire.

The apparently interminable proceedings against O'Connell and his conjutors, although brought to some spacies of conclusion, here not quite finished; an appeal has been made to the House of Lords, in the shape of a Writ of Error, against the judgment of the Court in Dublin. This case powents the English Judges from going on their circuit it the usual time, to the great inconvenience of sulters, witnesses, &c.

The whole history of this affeir is a tissue of mistakes, blunders, and delays, and, moreover, is very Irish. The word Traversers, applied to the accused, is most appropriate, for they have given striking specimens of "traverse sailing," on all points of the compass. It argued very badly for their sause—the endless delays and shifts to which they had recourse, for the apparent purpose of gaining time, in the hope of some hitch in the proceedings, or something occurring which would put an end to the trial. It was very clear that they trusted to such chances as these, rather thus to the inward conviction of their innocence of the charge.

We question if any such deleve and impediments could have taken place in any court out of Ireland. First came the histus in the names of the jury; the list intrusted to somebody, for the particular reason, was lost, nebody could tell how; then one lawyer was going to shoo another for differing in opinion with him. At last, after wading through demurrers, pleas, and errors, a conviction was obtained. Immediately the principal convict set of for London to enjoy his triumph; he was greeted with acclemations by a party in the House of Commons, and Covent Garden Theatre lighted up for his benefit. On his return to Ireland he reminded his countrymen bow at one time he had cursed the tyrannical Sazons: when, however, he had said them his last visit, they had given him a good food, and were very civil; thetefore be would lighten the anathems of a little of its weight by imitating Touch atone in his address to the Shepherd, and wishing only the Saxons to be d-d at one side like a bad "rousted sex." Another term was shulled over; but the doom wins come at last, even though one of the Judges had been In prenouncing sentence the convict a little skittish. and sould searcely have exhibited more tendersus if he had been sending them "to the place from whenk, they came, thence, &c., &c."

We recollect Cobbett for a far less offence be to Newgate for two years, and having to the fine of a thousand pounds out of his een pool to the the stony-hearted English Judge passed sentence with dry eyes! This was the conclusion of the tragi-comedy :.. the farce of penishment was to follow. It would be absurd to denominate us such the fines inflicted-they all come out of the pockets of the poor pessantry; and the imprisonment is the lightest that ever was inflicted for any offence of such magnitude. Lord Ffrench, in taking the chair at the Repeal Association, said that he came up to Dublin purposely deputed by those who were boiling with indignation at the unjust conviction, to present addresses to the martyre! We believe that many thousands, both in England and Ireland, would not have the slightest objection to undergo such martyrdom-a comfortable and dry bouse over their heads, good beds, the best of food and drink, liberty to see their friends at all times and give them dinners without costing them anything, a garden to take exercise in; every comfort, in short, and only abridged of the power of talking nonsense in the highways for a limited space of time.

This transformation of O'Connell into a Captive Prince, held in the power of some magician, and receiving all kinds of condolence, had become too ridiculous, and the admission of deputations has, therefore, been put a stop to, not a little to the discomfiture of the Worshipful the Corporations of Cork, Limerick, &c., who came up to Dublin with addresses, and will have to return after leaving their cards at the Penitentiary.

At the Repeal Meeting, Mr. Henry Grattan was so good as to say that he never would set foot within the walls of the House of Commons, unless his constituents obliged him. Would any one guess the cause of his dudgeon? Because the Morning Herald called the Irish savages! The same gentleman stated that he had his father's fire-arms safely locked up in a chest in Engaland, to prevent their being branded.

All this seems very pretty and sensible; but the law clerks of Dublin have reached the climax. They have addressed the Liberator as "Beloved Sire," and "Great Beloved Sire." Do they hint by this that they look on the Mertyr as their Sovereign, Daniel the First? or do they simply mean that he is the father of the profession—or their future hopes? In the latter case, we think that Dear Daddy would have been more tender, and appropriate.

THE Standing Orders for the Army in Ireland direct Major-Generals Commanding Districts to submit, from time to time, through the Deputy-Quartermaster-General, for the consideration of the Lieut.-General Commanding, such arrangements for the relief of detachments belong. ing to Corps under their command, as may be necessary to prevent, as far as the circumstances of the Service will permit, my Officer's party being stationed at an outquarter for a longer period than four months at any one time; yet, in the face of this judicious and highly necessary order (apon which mainly rests the discipline of Corpe), and without the existence of any "circumstances" to justify its infraction, we find that the Battalion of Royal Marines, at present on the Military strength of that country, has been detached in small bodies from the date of its arrival, viz. 10th June, 1843, up to the present period! How is it, we would ask, that this Battalion is an exception to the wholesome routine leid down for the Service generally, of which it forms a part? While other Regiments are, in due course, emeastrated for the purcost of drill and discipline (both of which deteriorate is Committee are dispersed for any length of time), this Rein like it atill compalled to remain thus disjointed and Bestalling atill compelled to remain thus disjointed and discount at a desen insignificant autposts, there to keep up, as it best can, its espeil du corpe and efficiency ! On the 5th July next, vacancies also for the command of the Lively and Greyhound Revenue-ornicars, will take place. The patronage of the latter is, however, more immediately in the hands of the Comptroller-General of Coast-Guard.

For the former appointments we understand there are numerous candidates, and we shall be happy to announce the names of the Officers selected, when we hear them.

A FEW brief notes upon the valuable work of Captain Siborne, which we have already reviewed, may be deemed not misplaced at the present season, this being the anniversary week of the great events of the campaign which that work commemorates, and to recal attention which the publication has been well timed. Let us maintain if possible, the tranquillity which Europe in general has so long enjoyed; but never let us forget the heroism of the thousands of our countrymen who fought for peace throughout the prolonged and tolleome atruggle of the Peninsula, and finally established it at Waterloo.

Captain Siborne, with a candour which does him much credit, has admitted in the present work, that in the relebrated model, the construction of which gave rise to he present history, he placed the Prussian forces in too orward a position, giving "the appearance of a much frenter pressure upon the French right flank than could maye occurred at the moment represented on the model." For the explanation of the cause of this error, we must refer to page 271, val. ii., of the bistory. The admission, besides affording additional proof that Wellington himself secured his own victory, is gratifying to us; hecause we thought and expressed an opinion at the time. that the Pressians on the model were too much in advance, and only forbore to declare that opinion publicly, from respect for the gallant modellist's superior opportunities of information. For the same reason we retained silence as to a doubt which then occurred to us of the correctness of the relative number of Napoleon's and Wellington's Army, as given in the description of the model. Here, again, it appears those doubts were well founded. The numbers of either Army now given by Captain Siberns at the commencement of the battle of the 18th stand cour :---

Wellington :-- 67.644 men, and 156 guns. Bonaparte :--71,947 men, and 946 guns.

Of the former force, only 23,991 men and 78 guns were British. The troops detached at a later period of the day under Loben and others to appose the Prussian advance, reduce the Franch to 52,105 men and 208 guns, testing a considerable numerical superiority in farour of the British; but if, again, from their numbers we deduct the Dutch Belgians who fought not, and by their flight, OF RESOLUTION IN HANDING BAGE, were worse than useless to their allies (since their conduct, whether arising from cowardies and imflection, might have dispirited or shaken any but and ices of the first quality), there remain shaken any but a $ 50,877 men and 124 game. The of the British 1885 50,877 men and 124 game. The numerical strength of the enemy was therefore superior. except nominally, throughout the day, even in man; a superiorid anhanced by the immense proportioner of his Artillery.

With regard to the Prostless, will أسديامل الاو their actual merits in the smallest degree, (murits to which no one door more cheerful justice than Captilla ine.) it must be allowed that his work proves, (if proof meeded.) that the British won the battle of Waterand there appears no just reason to doubt that they field. But the closery—the dispersion—the destruction of the mamy's force would, doubtless, kive been less compists, but for their dimely aid. On the other hand, Captain Siborns considers that had Napoleon, previous to attacking, evinced his most activity and energy, his suceres at Ligny, and his shape of system at Waterloo, would have been much greater.

A severe, but just rebuke, and not the lose severe because temperately worked, is given to Mr. Alseen, at page 167, vol. i., and elsewhere. We have formerly taken more then one encesion to appoin the atter went of authority of that writer, especially as in those Military events which form so large a portion of the transactions of the period he treats of in his work, which is, as a history, one of the greatest imporitions over indicted on the public. Yet it has found favour with many! a proof of the slight judgment with which this issened generation reed i

Brief notes, identifying the Officers, &c., named, said as Cant. Siborne has given, would, it appears to us, be an improvement to the "Ristory of the Peninsular War." An index would be an esec stable addition to either work, more especially as to the latter.

We fear much that in our seal to lay before the middle some cases of peculiar hardship, we may be injuring the cause of the individuals, by raising a surplaion that we are urged to the editorient by the persons sourcered. The our last we had coording to notice that Marchal Souls had got over the dissentiant voices of the Commission on the expenditure of Algiers, by stating that a Holy War had been proof timed in Merocco, and that 15,000 men had been collected a Outschia, in front of the French positions, in the province of Oran. This circumstance of a" Holy War" is altogether problematical; the essemblage of troops on the frontier has been in all probability, brought about by the soliditations of Abd-el-Kuder to the different tribes of the Atles Mountains, say by the mesus he has found of noting on their religious fancticism and warlike proposition. It is rumoused that on the assumbling of these tribes, they have forced their master to proclaim a Hely War; if such is really the case, the Emperer cannot be held responsible for a course of proceeding thrust upon him by, a set of lawless tribes; nor can it for a guarant he anatomed, that had he entertained can it for a moment be supposed, that had he entertained any fastings hostile to the Ponnets, and their occupation of Algeria, he would have waited so long for displaying counting would be altogether at them; in fact, such a propositing would be altogether at regioner with the policy and habits of Muley Abdorrations he has never shown symptoms of ambition, has a very ulier his dominion, autom hat he persuses as head of their mission. We have shown the little motive that the Emperor of Morocco can have for entering into a war with so power-ful an apponent, and nothing could be more contrary to the interests of England than such a contest-the chances in the first instance would be in favour of the French. and they would, as a first measure, spread themselves sions the northern shores of Africa, as far as Cape Spartel, and command the entrance of the Mediterranean. Gibralter, which is of smell value to us at present, and scens only held ne a point of national honour and pride, would, in that case, he quite worthless, and the difficulties of furnishing it with supplies during the time of war increased tenfold, by the ports of Tungiers, Tetuan, and the post of Couts, being in the hands of an enemy. Nothing our more fully prove the falsity of the bese assertions we have quoted, than this view of the case, for the tien of our prompting these people to hostility with France would lead directly to the annoyance and incomevaluate aliaded to, and beside stop up a channel through which our merchandise circulates through the north of Africa. There is a good deal of repouring on this subjust in the French papers, and emong other things it is stated that the Prince de Joleville, who wants to fight somehody, is on his way to the pones of Morucco.

We thereby hope that the apparamons of Lord Aber-in the House of Lords artified founded; but should does in the House of Lords artified founded; but should it unfertunately be the case that the mountain tribes force their account master into positives with the French, we have that this country will be placed in an awkward position; the French may say that they were not the first maragenes; that they had every right to repel force by force; therefore that no other mitten has a right to interfere; yet are we to stand by and see the ports above-mentioned occupied without remonstrance? It is altegather an awkward supportion, which, however, we hope will not be carried into effect. The French will see that the attempt to make the amagest of such a country their religion. The Africal Menoclasses, that somery power; you are completed without remonstrance? It is mentioned possible that the fifth for the feeling of allegiance to the latter small be accepted to the first small by proportion to the describer make the control of proportion to the describer make the small by and they are that the attempt to make the congress of such a country league such as a short the small state of their ment by attended with an analysis and expense; let them consider that Morocco, inhibiding all the tribes that roam through the desert, is as propulous as Spain; of more did cuit socces, and far more whealthy; let them remains what happened in the latter country, where only the national independence was threatened, and reflect that in Morocco, if the quarrel assumed that character in the first instance, the enmity would be doubly enhanced by the flercest religious fenuticism; which nothing but a war of extermination would quench !

We have little doubt that the French ministry see the affair in this light, and as far as their good intentions go, Be every confidence; but the war faction seems to increase, at least in their spoilerations, and have gained that surt of influence which is sufficient to cotifice and hamper the hands of Government. We have seen that the Admiral who acted in the first instance from his own Hear, and afterwards contrary to his instructions, became immediately popular, in the hope that his unauthorised acts might lead to a war; and he has not yet returned to France.

When the French expedition went first to Algiers, the Chimber of Doputies was needly equally divided between a restricted occupation, or a more extended one; the latter, even to the most sanguine, to be restricted to Constantine, Meden, and Maspara; but prompted by the war party, these limits have lyng since been passed, and they are now ready to fell upon Morosco, that has never given them the slightest equal of effence; had the Emperor seen the compation of Algiers with envy and hatred, he would have joined his forces at once to those of Abdel-Kader, and endeavoured to stop their progress, but no movement of the kind has ever taken place. .

The Emperor of Russia,-Amongst the magnificent and coatly presents by his Imperial Majesty were two and boxes, one to Captein the Earl of Hardwicke, hearing a highly-finished postrait of His Majesty, studded with a profession of this Majesty, studded with a profession of this ways, valued at 1900 a winser; also set in diamonds, bearing his initials, estimated at 200 guinens. These were handed by ilis Majesty when quitting the RiackKepic, in acknowledgment of their attention.

At the review in Windsor Park, the Emperor examined, with comparatively little interest the household troops, whilst, on the contrary, his inspection of the 47th Regi-ment, and of the 17th Lanogra, was most minute, and evi-dently gave him much satisfaction. The pircumstance having been afterwards mentioned to the Emperor, his reply was, "It is true; for although your Guards are noted tooking troops, I confess that I looked with far more integent on the sort of soldiers who gain the victories in India and China for you."

Then the Emperor visited the United Service Club m Saturday week, he was attended only by Baron Among the 18 members who happened to be Bruunow. present at that early hour was Sir Dagsid Gilmour, whom the Emperor instantly recognised as an old acquaintance. After saluting the gentlemen present, the Emperor said, "I have great pleasure in visiting this club, of which I said my brother have the honour to be members, and I do assure you that my brother charged me to give his kindest remembrance to all the members of it."

By lits Imperial Majesty's command, the Duchess wish informed that the benevolent object in view could not possibly meet with any kind of objection, and that in mich the subscription-list had not closed, and an additional sum to the funds would be desirable, or requisite, Hims Brunnow had been commanded to sign his name for all sum which the Duchess might think proper to men

"Don Carloe" is founded on a subject singularly rick and felicitous, for lyrical and musical exposition. The charac-ters are so dramaiscally antagonised, and the several passions of the actors are so single in their development, that the close consecutiveness of the action is never disturbed, or the sympathics broken in upon. Costa has very skilfully seekered the barren lightness of the sean-tisity modern Southern school, and given his work ampli-tude and strength that will be appreciated by every true lover of sound music. With the airmosa of Italy he has combined the contra-puntal excellencies of severer has combined the contri-puntal excellences of severer masters. _4 Note" of the Prince de Joinville,-The Revue des Deux Mondes of the 15th publishes som brief observations on the Note of the Prince de Joinville relative to the navy of France. The writer generally ap-proves the suggestions of the Psince, and advises his countrymen to be more sober and reserved in bossting, and to prepare with more care elements of success, and then says, that "everything considered, the chances of France in a war with England are as one to three, and that to re-establish the balance only two means are left, namely, French bravery with the present condition, or a better combination of the forces of France with the asbetter combination of sistance of steam." This last had been suggested by the Prince, and was likewise recommended by the Revue des Doux Mondes, which, however, candidly admits that "France cannot alone compete with Great Britain on the ocean, and proposes an alliance with states of a secondary naval power, whom she might easily raily in defence of the principle of the freedom of the sea." The Revue "expects also the most advantageous results from the buccaneering system of warfare patronised by the Prince and thinks that 20,000 Frenchmen landi in Munster, and proclaiming the independence of Ireland could not be resisted by all the forces England migh bring against the

The suspended departure of the Prince de Joinville to take the command of the sunadron to act against Morocci had occasioned vast surprise and much comment. "The English," being previously denounced as the founders of the quarrel between France and Morosco, are naturally set down by the Opposition press as having prevented the departure of the Prince on his devastating mission. "There is possibly some ground for this charge," says a Paris he offer of British mediation may have retarded, and possibly obviated, any pretext for the expedition of which the young Admiral was to have the command; and a fortunate sircumstance it would be if an amicable ar-rangement shall be brought about. Let us hope that in addition to pessemaking you will now distinctly impress upon the minds of one parts that he must not get into quarrels impaine that you will extricate him from them should they prove disadvantageous to him; and upon the other party that he must not possess himself of Tangiers, and with it the entire Mediterranean, under any protence whatever. — When the Duke d'Angouleme perceived his death approaching he sea to the archives of the War Department an important work which he had not executed during the Restoration, giving, in folio, plans, drawings, and full descriptions of all th fortified places in France, sliowing their week points, the beat modes of attacking them, and the proper manner of

MEMORANDUM OF A CONVERSATION WITH MAJOR R. POTTINGER, IN PERSON, 1842.

The following conversation interested me deeply when it pessed, and in the course of the same day I wrote down the particulars.

The little party at Charekar had been besieged for eight days; Major Pottinger had written to Cabul for succour, and, as no help came, he know there must be something very much amiss, although he had not received. something very much amiss, although he had not received definite tidings of the outbreak there. These left alive at Charekar on 13th Nov., 1841, were Pottinger, Haughtou, Rose, Dr. Grifit, a Serjeent-Major, and about three hundred of the Choorka troops. That day Pottinger had received a ball in his leg, but the wound had not been dressed; and Haughton's arm had been fractured and amputated. During alght days the highly of water had been very acunty for the men; while the cattle had not tasted it for ten days, and during that time had been almost without food. Finding no relief approached, and that their position was untenable for want of previsions or ammention, the Officers resolved to out their way out. or ammanition, the Officers resolved to cut their rather than be starved or massecred. Accordingly, on the evening of the — of Nov., at the detail hour for relieving guard, theremeant of our force marched out of the fact, Pettinger and Haughton on horsebook; with the advance, Dr. Great in the centre, Rose and the Serjeent-Major bringing up the rear—in all, little shore three hundred men. ing up the rear—in all, little above three hundred seen. They first made their way to the water, the distance (to the best of my recellention) being two miles. On reaching it, there was a general rush forward to distant. Puttinger had with him a soldier's cantann, which he filled, and this was the sole sustemance he mid Haughton had for their journey. When the party had satisfied their thirst Pottinger attempted to mission his man, and march towards Cabal. He would not yoursenable thou, and I cannot recellent what reason had painted the man of opinion that the main budy had at the little the leader of the Little and in the dark just entangled in the little what the reason in the little what is made in the dark just entangled in the little what the reason in the little what is not the little what is not the little what the main budy had at the little what the reason in the little what the reason in the little was a linear and little when removed the second which the leader the linear and little when removed the little was a little the rest or the greater part of them had rode on same tance; on halting, they found their party amounts loss than a dozen. Pertinger then said to Haughton the force was now broken up; they were too few to E the force was now broken up; they were too faw to Etheir way by the direct road, and the only channe he store their own lives wen to attempt a sheep-track leading towards Cabul, which he recollected to have travelled in 1837. Haughton said he would leave him to making, and they went on, associated only by one Bunia and seed Ghoorks Sepahi, named Man Singh. How they got the almost a mirrete, one with a hall in his leg and the world not dressed; the other with his arm only a few hours amounted; both mounted on hourse, all but starved, and amputated; both mounted on horses, all but starve their two native companions on foot. "Did you n taid I, "suffer dreadful agony from your wounds! "Yes, but the pain from the cold was more fateness." "True, the cold must have aggressed the wounds." was not that so much as the sensation of cold in our bodies, was not that so much as the sensation of cold in our bodies, like lances darling through the chest and sides. "....." How were you dressed?"....! Ask....." In our uniforms: I had a Choga over mine, and Haughton a Military stack over bls."...." And what became of the horse that carried you?" ....." I gave him afterwards to Colin Mackenzie; and when the primpers were going to Buddiabed, that horse carried the prisoners were going to Buddiabed, that horse carried not only him, but a heavy man behind him the whole way. Mackanzie, when they returned to the Provinces, gave him to Mr. Clerk."

I do not remember that Pottinger gave any further particulars of their march that night: by daylight they had reached a narrow savine, where they concealed themselves; it was in the dry bed of a river, narrow and winding; they lodged in an abrupt bend, four or five feet wide, with perpendicular banks about 12 feet high. Pottinger lay down in a narrow gorge, formed by a water-course in one of the banka, and fell asleep. His centeen had been about helf full of water, which he gave to Haughton. The sun was high when Pottinger was awakened by his companions calling out that the Affghans were upon them. He entreated silence, while he acrambled up the bank sufficiently to peep over: they heard the enemy at band, but saw no one. Pottinger desired his companions to secure the horses, and keep as quiet as possible; he then lay down and went to sleep In the evening they renewed their journey. again. In the evening they renewed their journey. Leaving the ravine, Pottinger was some time before he could recover the path, and tried several points imane-censiony. It sughton, peer fellow, became impatient, and said, "You don't know the way—I'll find it for myself;" and he rode his horse up a bank, so atcep that the saddle slipped over the tail, and horse and rider and all rolled down. Pottinger came up on hearing the fall. "I can do no more," and Haughton; "you must leave me here."—"No," replied his friend, "baving brought he won so far. I won" leave you now." and eventually he me here."—" No," replied his friend, "baving brought you so far, I won't leave you now;" and, eventually, he managed to get Haughton mounted again.

They got on pretty well, still avoiding the public road, till they approached Cabul; only they had to pause every faw miantes for their two foot companions. At length they reached a Hindoo shrine, where the Bunia left them, thanking them for their protection. Pottinger advised the Ghoorka to do the same, throwing his accountements the tencorns to so the same, throwing his accounts and election into the river, so as to escape detection. But Man Singh refused, saying they were his masters, that he had esten their salt, and would stick by them. Passing different small camps, they were challenged, but were not detected in the dark, Pottinger replying in Persian. He tried to make for a road that skirted the city, awoiding the large basear; but, making a wrong turn, they enter upon a picquet of the enemy, who challenged them. Finding they had gone wrong, but afraid to appear seeking their read, Pottinger assumed an engry tone, said asked the soldiers why they molested travel-. His way of speaking deceived them, and they were just suffering the travellers to pass, when the Ghoorks coming forward, the shining of his leather accountrements coming forward, the shining of his seather accourrements in the light of the picquet fire raised the starm, followed by the say of "Feringhee!" and the discharge of a volley, which, however, took no effect; and before the enemy small subset, our friends were beyond their reach. Pottinger and Raughton urged their poor horses into a trot and manth an thereon the town, when they were auditable. han through the town, when they were saddenly make up by a deep trench cut across the road. At this ment the Ghoorks, who had seemed ready to drop, patring the horses, and when he saw the horses stop, singlet held of Pottinger's bridle, and throwing his weight on it justed the horse over. Passing through the town, on a person to noise over. Fassing through the town, they now Capt. Trever's house dismentied, and inferred our Charters; but eventually they reached the canton-milk; and galand admittance. Pottinger had a severe layer the some days, and Haughton was obliged to have million; semperation of his arm. The distance they had temperated was, to a direct line, about thirty-sic miles.

While transcribing the foregoing, I see how many of the details are meagin, and wonder how I could have agained to ask for further information, and note it at the time; but samely as are the particulars, I desire to place them on record, as my antali tribute to the memory of Eldred Pottinger.

National Regoneration, Second, Political, and Miliary Riggested by Prince de Johnsille's "Essai sur les Forcas Navales de la France." By a Raticed Miliary Officer. T. and W. Johns.

This is a patriotic and forcible pheaf to the statement, the rulers, the people of Regions. That the Prince de Johnville's pamphlet is the result, in great measure, of national smity, personal pique and disappointment, and bitter intermenty with reference to England, there cannot be a fault; but, with due allowance for those motives, it contains much that is entitled to acrious consideration in this contrey. Independently of other circumstances—though wher circumstances—though wher circumstances—though wher circumstances—though where circumstances—though where circumstances—though where circumstances—though where circumstances—though where lightly in the relations between England. However, the action to be action of the concepts of a serious character, which frates as a propelling power to the purposes of margation, been accepted, the difficulties might possibly have been tenned to the American presender themself, to have been rendered successful or available in a descent upon the English shore. Moar of our readers must remediber the celebrated "Rejected Addresses," by Jemes and Horace Smith; indeed, no one who ever read can have forgotten them—their happiness of instation, the richness of their humour, the briliancy of their wit. A subject closely recembing that which gave birth to those "Addresses"—the offer of a promium for the bost verses that should be presented for delivery on the aggresson of spening the new Drary Lane. Theater— has called factly, framewore of the marry wegs of "Panch" the effusions now schore us. Nuthing could be happier than the idea, which we have no doubt was auggested by the former publication. However, we can-not auffer the opportunity to pass without sliuding to the infinitely more sensible, more honest, more honourable conduct of the lesses of the Haymarket Theatre, than that of the Committee of Drury Lone Theatre. The latter, after offering a prize for the "best" Address that might be presented, determined, in their windom, that not one of the host of Addresses that were sent in was worthy of their prize; and, therefore, in their fustine, they rejected them all! (he there had been to reservation in the offer, comings, senie and common lionesty would have awarded the price to the best of the betch, however had that best their shunnitty. Having in rank dishonesty and injustice, rejected all the Addresses that were presented, they, in their distress, applied to Lord Byron to write one; and from the mobile bard they received some verses which motwithstanding Byren's gantus were were then nine-tenths of what had been thrown to the dags? Mr. Webster, on the other hand, has kindeemely kept fath with the writers, and with the public, by paying his professed point of 500%, to the author of the womendy, de principles posse of committee of examination to be the test out of about 100 that were sent in. It is now, we believe, wendedwary to add, that hirs. Goes, one of the most popular novaliate of the day, was the fortunate competitor.

Our judgment seems to wever between that of bioridan Knowles and that of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytten, though some of the others are equally characteristic of the exple of the writers to which they are respectively sesigned. Wang this the first appearance of Admiral von Wrangelt's interesting and important "Navative." wa should feel correction and important to severe temporary into the contents to

The original work was drawn up by M. von Wrangell himself, in the Russian drawn up by M. von Wrangell himself, in the Russian language, in the year 1820, with a view to its publication by the Government; but, from incidental occurrences, it seems to have been lost aught of by the Russian Admiralty. At a later period (1839) a German translation of the "Narrative" was produced by M. Engelhardt, with an filustrative Map (given also in the present edition) of the North-East of Siberia, communicated by M. von Wrangeli.

"In the following year, 1846, the first edition of the present volume was published, being a translation upde by Mrs. Sabine from the (derman of M. Regidhard, reduced into a somewhat smaller compass than the original, partly by the centraion of the metacorological tables, partly by the decimals of a more simple and concise style, and partly by the decadonal curtalination of the original work."

Colonel Sabine adds—

This Institution of computered by a special Act of Parliament, and is so constituted as to affend the benefits of Life Assurance, in their fullers entent, to policy-holders, and is present greater facilities and accumundation than are usually offered by other companies. The decided superiority of its plan, and its chain to public preference and support, have been glaved, incontestably, by its extraordinary and unprecedented assess.

Assurances may either be effected by Fartise on their own lives, or by Parlies interested therein on the Lives of others.

The effect of an Assurance on a person's own life is to create at once a Property in Reversion, which can by no other means be realised. Take, for instance, the case of a person at the age of Thirty, who, by the payment of Mr. is, of, to the Britancia at once a Property in Reversion, which can be presented by the assurance Company, can become at once passessed of condition of his continuing the same payment quarterly, daring the reservance of an expression of the late—a condition which may be fulfilled by the more assing of Eight Shillings weekly is his expensitive. PORTEMOUTH, June 28.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Bonetta sailed on Saturday for the Mediterrancen, calling at Guerosey on her way down Channel. ance is in harbour to be docked, and put in order for further service; the invalids which she brought home have been transferred, with other sick soldiers, to the Prince George transport, and she has taken them to Chatham. An inquiry took place on board the Collingwood on Saturday, Rear-Adm. Parker, President, on the application of Rear-Adm. Sir George Seymour; it having been stated to him that her masts were not properly secured, and hable to be crippled. The report of the Officers who were ordered on this inquiry completely refuted the complaint, and it is to be regretted that it was ever made. Collinguoud is fitting rapidly; her lowerdeck guns will be taken in at Spithead; she is painting. Systembase is out of dock, and will so up the handless made when strong the result of the strong th ping her maute, &c., and, after being paid off, is to be refitted for sea, by Capt. Martin, and the Officers and crew of Camperdown, and when equipped go to Shoorness, as flag-ship of Vice-Adm. Sir J. C. White; it will doubtless be advisable to have her in dock before she goes to the castward; Camperdown is expected daily from Sheerness, and will go into the Harbour immediately, be cleared of all her stores, &c., and laid up in ordinary, but ultimately he cut down to a two-decked ship. There will not be the slightest difficulty is manning the squadron, without even waiting for the paying off of the Quien, as there are a great number of able scamen who have been waiting for some time, as well as many others recently paid off from the Malaber, Penel, Indus, &co., who have expressed their intention of volunteering into these vessels. The forthcoming trials at exciting an unusual degree of interest, which is not confined to the Naval community alone, but is extended to all acquainted with nautical affairs. The members of the Royal and other Yacht Clubs, are looking forward to the results with as much interest as they do to the contests between the vessels of their own righe. The immediate friends of each countryctor of course believe that the parties in whom they are interested will be the successful ones, and their wishes being father to their thought, that the reseri built by their constructor is superior to the others, and the favourite among nautical mon. Thus the friends of Messes. Rend. The prevailing opinion, honever, in the Service is in favour of the hurveyor's craft. This opinion is not formed from any minute comparson between the construction of his and the other brige, but is the result of Hir William Aymonds' high reputation as a naval architect, there being but very few Officers at present in the Service who have not had an apportunity of witnessing the superiority of his ships, om the first-rate line of buttle ship, like the Queen, to the ten-gun sloop, like the Pantalogn, over every other ship of the same class, in the numerous trials that have been made. The interest in the forthcoming trials in greatly increased from the circumstance of the two rival versels, Pantalous and Waterwitch, forming part of the experimental considers. The Pantaloon was, as we have already stated, built by the Surveyor of the Navy, and the Waterwitch by Mr. White, of Cowes, who built it us a racht for Lord Bellast, and that noblemen sold it into the Service. The Waterwitch is a very fast sailor, and when on the African station had repeated trials with the Picturedoon, in speas of which she best that vessel, and in others was beaten by lier.

The Amuson and Dedalus correttes, rezeed frigates the one at Sheeroes and the other at Woolwich -will be commissioned immediately they are ready, and will join the experimental aquadron, in order that, being experi-ments themselves, their capabilities may be treted. H.A.S. "CLEOPATUA." Latters have been received by the Admiralty from Captain Wyrill, at the Cape of Good Hope, confirming the account of the massacre of Lieut. Molesworth and seven stamen of the frigate. The dotalls of this deplorable event, while they confirm every fact, add very little to what we have already published. It appears from the peculiar local currents on the west coust of Madagascar, the Cloopairs was sarried on a reef rocks, the position of which was not laid down in charts, but abe, fortunately, was got off without receiving any acrious damage, and subsequently Lieut, Molesworth in the pinnece, with a crew of thirteen men, without any arms whatever, were sent to recover a kedge anchor, which had been used in warping the frigate off. Their position and character neturally draw a great numher of natives in cames to the spot, two of whom. while the erew were enruged in their work, entered the man-of-zer's boot, with an intention, as the crew supposed, to steal the stores. They were immediately turned out, on which the pour fallows were surrounded by the canoca, and immediately became targets for a shower of spears, which were hurled at themewith terrible effect. The ship was only about two hawsers' lengths from the best, but so suiden was the attack, and so expected, that it was not aren from on board; and the wrotches were only frightened away by supposing the frigate was standing in towards them, the ship belus taken shack at the moment, her head paul off in that direction, and the canons made off for the share with all possible speed. Lieut. Molesworth and two of the men were killed on the anot, live received mortal injury, and three others were dangerously wounded, leaving three only of the pinnace's new untouched.

THE PRESEN NAVY .-- He must indeed be inuttentive to events, who has not observed that one of the main objects of France, since 1756, has been to sugment her Navy, and to give a nautocal heat to the genius of her people. Since 1829 and has more vigorously and more anxiously struggled for these objects; and we are not dispused to deny that in these 15 years France has made as great and an rapid a progress as has been asserted by the author of the "Ports, Arsensis, and Duckyards of France," efforts of the Government to create a Navy, it is plainly a child of a forced growth and sickly constitution. But, though the bent and genius of the people he not maritime, they have, nevertheless, made greater progress in martial science. IN Our last notice of these operations, we mentioned that the results of the first attempts for removing the guns of the Ragar were anything but satisfactory. When Maj.-Gen. Pastey inspected the work on 13th May, only one gun and two fregments of guns had been found, together with some pieces of wood generally rotten, and in a transition state, changing into peet; and for some time afterwards the progress was equally unsatisfactory, for though five very zealous divers were employed for three slack tides every day, the produce of one day's exertions was only one buttle and a six-pound shot, and of another only one bottle and a jug. Thus all their efforts to discover the remaining guns at the bottom, known to be 47 in number, proved ineffectual, and the Officer and men employed almost gave up the hope of auccess, till Gen. Pasley, who had directed them to search the bottom, partly by diving, and partly by sweeping from boats, find-ing his daily expectation of receiving more favourable reports disappointed, wrote to Lieut. Barlow not to confine his researches to the vicinity of the wreck-buoy near which the first guns had been found, but to sweep all round in every direction, and fo a much greater distense than had yet been attempted, until the remainder of the wreck should be heen attempted, until the remainder or the wisck should be discovered. This was done accordingly, and on sweeping with line of about 110 fathems in length, with a chain in the centre, which scraped along the bottom, whilst the ends of the line were saids fast to a couple of boats, rewing parallel to each other, this obstruction was discovered on 23d May by the entanglement of the chain in some character at the hottom, at the distance of about 60 on 23d May by the entanglement of the chain in some obstacle at the bottom, at the distance of about 60 fathoms, to the northward of the position of the wreckbuoy. Corporal Jones, the most skilful diver, was immediately sent there in a leaster, with his diving apparatus; and after having descented and carefully examined the spot, he reported that he found all the central part of the hull of the ship standing up to the height of about 12 feet, with its timbers distinguishable, like the commencement of a ship on the stocks, excepting that the stem and stem were gone, having no doubt been blown to a distance by the explosion of the fore and aft powder magazines. That same day he sent up a 32-pounder and an 18-pounder gan, to the Itrake sailingounder and an 18-pounder gan, to the Brake sailinglighter, which was brought to the spot to receive them.
When this news was communicated to the other workmen, who were on board the lumps at some distance, they received it with three cheers, and from that period all feeling of despondency ceased. Next day the lumps they received it with three cheers, and from that period all feeling of despondency ceased. Next day the lumps were moured over this mass of wrock, the removal of which has since been proceeding in the most satisfactory manner, so that the number of gans recovered this essaon now amounts to 18, of which Couporal Jones sent up 8—viz., three Liquinders, one 18-pounder, one broken 18 pounder, and three becomes; Private blicklen, of the East India Company's Sapres and Miners, four-viz., three 2-jounders and one 18-pounder and expender and expender and expender and Frivate M'Donaid, of the same, one p-pounder; heatdess which, Corporal Macfarlan, of the Mil. When tien. Pusity made his second inspection, on 12th Jane, he found everything going on with activity, and a great quantity of timber was get up in his presence. The Machane has shead carried in a earge of 18 from guss, which were deposited on the tridinance Wilarf, besides a great mass of limber, which was delivered in the Dockpard, and piled on what is called "the leland," in zer of the Prixing-house. The sexton and assistants then proceeded to dig the grave; the corpse, in the meanwhile, being taken into Clawer church, and the comrades of the deceased "standing at ease" the churchyard. This sulogium from the gallant Sir Hercules Fakenhum must be highly flattering to Col. Adams and the Officers who proceded him in the command after arrival at Portamouth, or the real was cortainly in a most immentable state of desorganisation prior to going to Fortentonib.

Considerable surprise exists in the Woolwich garrison at not seeing the name of Captein Johns, Royal Marines, who commanded the Guard of Honoar to the Emperor of The Captein Capt Russis, in the Gasette for a Brevet majority. The dis-tinction he experienced on this eccasion was somewhat remarkable, being summoned by the Emperor's command to an interview, when several flattering compliments were paid him on the appearance and conduct of his fine detachment; and a conversation was heard among the officials present on the occasion which pointed to some testimony of Royal approbation. Captain Johns is the only Officer who remains undistinguished by sither promotion, Officer who temains undistinguished by either promotion, or some other honour, of those who were in attendance upon his Imperial Majesty. We hear that he is much esteemed by his corps, and well known by his productions in the literary circles of London.

Sin,—It may not, perhaps, be generally known that the Officers of the Royal Marine Forces are liable to corporal punishment, by the sentence of a General Court-Martial, for the profanation of any place dedicated to Divine Worship; * while their brethren of the Line, for the same offence, are merely liable to "such punish ment as by a General Court-Martial shall be awarded;" no mention whatever being made of corporal panishment in the case of the Officers of the Army

I am at a loss to account for this singular difference between the corresponding articles of their respective Mutiny Acts; and can scarcely think that, as both codes have recently undergone revision, by the same legal authorities, that this apparent anomaly escaped attention. On the contrary, I am disposed to believe that "cause can be shown" why it shall be so; but I must say, I can be shown" thy it shall be so; but I must say, I should wish to be impoured therewith, so that I, as an Officer of Marines, may have "no just cause of complaint," should I ever unfortunately see a protest oback bared at the Halberts, for the rejentless hand of the J. U. " should I ever unfortunately see a brother Officer's drummer to operate upon.

88th—To the Editor of the Naval and Milliary Gazette. Sin,—Serjoant-Major Spellicy, late of the 98th Reg., begs to point out an erroneous statement made by the author of the Historical Records of the 88th Regiment. In describing the Battle of Fuentes D'Onor, fought on 3th May, 1811, the author states that the battalion was ordered to advance in column of actions, left in front, in double-quick time, headed by their brave Colonel. Such statement is incorrect, and the following is the fact. Skirmishers were ordered out, communicing with the Light Company, and followed in succession by the 8th, 7th, 6th, and 5th Batt. Companies. Col. Wallace was direct-ing these skirmishers to the left of the village, and during which time a subsequent order was given to charge the enemy through the village; at that moment I aprang over the bank to the right of the passage (which rather im-peded our advance), and placed myself at the head of the column, with my helbert at the charging position, and led them on to the charge until the final overthrow of the enemy, for which I was noted and recommended by the late Maj.-Gou. II. Mackinnon for an Epsig but after the fall of that General Officer at Cluded Rodeigo, I was not brought forward by my Commanding Officer for a commission, which is a great injury to myself and family, depriving me of my just rights, and upwards of 33 years of progressive promotion; and as your valuable Gazette is the only advocate I have to plead my cause, I trust and believe that you will be pleased to give insertion in your columns of this, my just complaint. P.S.—The charge was made by the right wing of the

Here, ton, are to be found the manuals suists at the corps—if too, are to be lound the manuais sujets at the corpethere he any—and Courts—Martial of course follow; Boards of Burvey, Courts of Inquiry, Compictees, and lots of other calls of this nature, which I cannot now recollect, from my having been so long out of the seach, independent dent of the usual routine of duties. In short, to curry on these duties as by the Regulations of the Service is expected and required, and also to enable their gallent Commander to change the young Officers from time to time between Head Quarters and the out-posts; then I say, Sir, that the Rifles of Canada ought and must have the additional Lieutemants; and indeed the present standing of the Ensigns fully entitles them to this promotion, as by all accounts they have otherwise a slender chance dvancement,

This injustice to our Rifles could not have originated in sconony, for even Joseph Hume himself would be ashamed of such patry paring, opposed, as it is, to the interest of the Service.

There, is also another malter that I am equally sure the above-mentioned honourable member would disclaim all participation in, as totally unconnected with finance : I slinde to Ensigns boing guzetted to these Rifles in place of 2d Lieuts, there being no difference whatever in the pay or allowance. This appears to me to be inexplicable, as even the Regiments of the Line, called Fusiliers—that is, having wings in place of shoulder-straps, for I know no other distinction—boast of their junior rank taking precedency of those of our Rifles.

Being aware, of old, that your columns are the legitimate channel of conveying to the proper authorities all grievances, &c., I do think you will on this subject call their attention to what I have been undeavouring to represent, and when I have every hope that they will place our Colonial Regiment on the same respectable footing as all others of similar denomination. (lighly sensible of the very many benefits occurring to the Army generally, through your excellent advocacy, I am, &c.

To the Enter of the Name on Military descrite,

Sin, There is no department under the Crown that so much requires a lifting hand from you as this; and the great relience all the Bervices have upon your mrantiting soil and perseverance in repossing their claims upon all prepar occasions, leads me to hope that you will not referen to lay before the world the greatmone of a class of Officers, certainly the most lil-paid of all Her Majesty's servants.

During the time the late lampated Lord Vivian's was Master-General of the Ordinance, Junites governed the decisions of the Board with respect to Barrack-Masters, by promotions and removate from length of service; but no accour was his successor appointed than a new wirefeine's commessed, and though old and Secreting Officers were not actually pud doors, they sertainly never have get up the ladder of prometion. Almost every vacancy in the First and Bacond Classes that has since occurred has been jets in the third class, after from 10 to 20 years' service; in proof of which I now state some of the appointments standed to at Acare z—Worlwich, First Class, Lieut.-Col. Middleton and Capt. Mackensia; Manotester, First Class, Skr J. Colleton, Bart.—einos removed to Dorchaster, Second Class, Windsor, Second Class, Major Chipchase; Dorry, Second Class, Major Gosett Davenport, Second Class, Capt. Ross.

In your Gosette of the 13th April, 1944, a General Order appeared from the Admiralty, stating that the Barrack-Masters of the Royal Marines were to be paid in future by length of service, viz., 7s. th. on appointments, 10s. after seven years, and 18s. per diem after ten years.

In your Gosette of the Loth a similar good lack awaits the Ordinance, after so good an example by the Admiralty, whose Barrack-Maurice have their half-pay, in addition to their barrack maluries, whilst, I have heard, some of the Ordinance on their promotion, from their unfortunted ynot having risen begond the rask of Subsiliers.

muted allowence on their promotion, from their unfor-tunately not having risen beyond the rank of Subaltern, whilst others retain theirs from having been Captaina (and which they certainly ought to do),—leaving the former with the loss of their herd-carned smust income, former with the loss of their hard-carned annual income, and what is still worse, their widows without pension.

Looking around, I see every branch of the Service ign-proving, both Navy and Army; end why not the Civil Department of the Ordnance? and if the same boon is greated to it as to the Marines, I care not who the Master-General appoints to vacaneles, though I have some dear to me deserving of promotion; as for myself, I have esseed to expect anything, having at present an office or employment to vex or disappoint ms.

COLONIAL SERVICE AND COLONIAL TAXATION.

To the Relitor of the Nevel and Milliary Garette.

Bin,—It is an admitted and indisputable fact, that many of the ameliorations and improvements which have taken place of late years in the soudition of the Members of the United Service, are mainly attributable to the judicious suggestions contained from time to time in your annulus and arealisms unfilliarities, and applied judicious auggestions contained from time to time in your able, countstent, and excellent publication, cordully accorded, as it has ever been, by the talented advocacy of your contemporaries and "risade in venues." the United Service Magazine and United Service Candile. To the active and warm co-operation of this irresistible "tria juncte in uno" are we indebted for many advantages, the adoption of which might probably mover have occurred, were our rulers left solely to the spontaneous productions of their corn turned the manufacture of their corn turned the manufacture of their corn turned the manufacture of their corn turned the manufacture of their corn turned the manufacture. productions of their own unsonder memories.

It could never have been seriously contemplated by our Beconstaries of Nate for the Colonies, those at the head of the War department, and at the Horse Guards, when troops are serving in the Colonies, that the Officers' uniform that the Colonies and the Colonies of the Officers' uniform. forms, Band-instruments, and Band-slothing, were to be subjected to Colonial taxation. A very anomalous, or rather monetrous affair has just been ensoted here, by the subjected to Colonial taxation. A very content in the restrict mometrous affair has just been emorated here, by the sainure of some musical instruments by the Curton-house people, belonging to the 4th Regt. These impositions and taxes tend very much to reader service abroad much more disquesting to the Army than it otherwise would be. Many think expatriation to a distant Colong, without Allowaness of any description, a sufficient burthen—one, indeed, difficult to be borns with patienne.

It is this state of things which induces that endless struggle to avoid Colonial Service, and perpetuates, adsternam, the edium in which it is regarded by every Officer in the Army without a Magin stangetion. Is there not something radically wrong in the system of Colonial taxation, when an Officer is told on landing here, by a Sambler of Customs, that he is middled to have enly one seat free of duty? SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1844.

THE occusional visits of foreign Sovereigns to this country we consider, spert from the more indulgance of curiosity, events of the highest importance, not only with regard to England, but to Europe generally. In the first instance, they serve to abate or do away with prejudice on both sides; and we look on their fraquent reourrence as one of the principal causes why the general dislike of foreigners, which Englishmen seemed to imbibe with their mother's milk, has now almost entirely disappeared. We recollect to what an extent this unimasity against the French was carried, during our late struggle with that country; and how much that feeling was stimulated by every possible means, in speaking and writing it was carried often to such excess, as to defeat its own purpose, and was partaken of, not alone by the ignorant and uninformed, but by persons of rank and talent; we even know instances of Officers in the Services, who bore a sort of nersonal hatred to the French; among the foremost of these was the great example of Lord Nelson. This sort of feeling might be in a great degree praiseworthy during a period of hostility, when we were struggling for our very existence as a nation; but the glorious termination of the war, and the vast crowds of English who flew to the Continent, very soon dispelled this dislike, amounting to herror, which had existed against the French in general. We have stated that Lord Nelson participated in this sentiment-we believe, we may add, Lord Collingwood, and one or two others; but in the Navy there were very lew opportunities of seeing the better part of the French character; in four cases out of five, they had no communication with the Officers of the hostile nation, until they came on board their ships to deliver up their swords, and then the generosity displayed was all on the English side. Neither on the sea, when ships come in sight, are there those pauses in hostility which are so frequent on shore, and where mutual forbearance, unless in the moment of combat, tends to give a more generous tone of feeling to those who are opposed. The immediate vicinity of the advanced posts of an Army give frequent opportunities for acts of mutual civility, and even kindness, in which the French Officers and their men appeared to great advantage; in most cases where our Officers were taken prisoners, they were treated like rentlemen. For these several causes, we may say, that the ancient projudice and dislike that used to exist against the French in the abstract has entirely died away; and we have only to regret that a reciprocal feeling of good will is not equally prevalent at the other side of the chennel.

Although the Russians were the best and most successful allies we ever had, their resistance and sacrifices, made in 1812, having broken the second link of the great chain that bound all Europe; yet since the peace of 1815 a growing projudice has been fostered in this country against that people and their Sovereign. The amount of their Military force was vastly exaggerated-they were supposed to be bent on universal conquest-Constantinople was to be the third capital-and the more report of the march to Khive, and their ultimate supposed view on our Indian possessions, sent many thousands of our brave fellows to perish in the passess of Alighanistan.

Without taking into account the direcumstances under which the present Case assumed the ruine of Government, the unsettled state of Poland, and the west extent of frontier to be defended, he was held up as an unmitigated tyrant, murdering and banishing the Poles, and the perse outer of the Jews, out of mere capties; indeed, these reprocedes ran so high, that we had some slight apprehensions that the Emperor, if he visited par shores, might meet with some affront; but the supposition was an injustios to our countrymen, which one short week was sufficient to disprove. Without waiting to seen the conduct that carried is other Corps; but of this we speak from of the Emperor towards his own sufficien, they looked on recollection only, of some years ago. We again say, him as the great of their Sovereign and the nation; they whatever Pack may be proposed, ise it be tried on short peceived him with corresponding demonstrations, and ere perfectly gratified by the distinguished app were personny grantes by the distinguished appearance, noble bearing, and princely munificance of their Imperial visitar.

If we were to rake up couses of animonity or prejudice from past times, they might be brought to beer against the respected Monerch who is still within our dominions. During the long and ambitious career of Benaparte, the iate King of Saxony was his most devoted ally, and remained so until his own troops deserted him at Leipele; but who would think of bringing that up as a matter of reproach now-a-days against his successor? We simply see him as an honoured guest, and the only remembrance is, that he reigns over a kindred people, from whom we have derived much of our language, institutions, and even the virtues in which we most pride ourselves. Beside the pleasure and instruction foreign Princes receive on visiting our island, they will be able to accertain by their own eyes that, as long as the nation is true to itself, and although not possessing an Army adequate to half the calls on it, Great Britain is not to be conquered.

The three regiments now under orders for India will be completed by volunteers from regiments at home, instead of from volunteers in India. It would be a boon to permit some of the men who returned from India within the last three or four years, and whose health and strength have been fully restored, to volunteer for the regiments embarking for that country. The British soldier does not dislike serving in India-to suppose so is an error; but he considers it a herdship that he has to serve there more than 20 years, while his comrades at other foreign stations serve only ten years. We have certain knowledge that a considerable number of men who returned from India with their regiments, would now, after having seen their friends and renovated their health, most willingly embark for that country. We allade to soldiers of four or five years' service in India prior to the return of their regiments to England, and whose characters are good. The old system of allowing the broken-down and the depraved men of the regiments leaving India, to extend their services to those in that country, or arriving in it, was reinous to good discipline, and perpetuated a numerous body of drunkards and disorderly soldiers in 11.M.'s Army

WE again revert to the important consideration of reducing the size and weight of the Kuppeack in the Line. We believe it is too true that the present Pack is judged of as carried by the Foot Guards. We need not remark that the Pack is not too large nor too heavy for the Guardeman, a tall and generally a stout man. But the Infantry Soldier of the Line is not either a tall or stout man like the Guardsman. We have a very large majority of our Infantry under 5 feet 7 inches, and very many exceedingly alight and narrow-shouldered. On these men the Knapsack is not a weight but a load. It is too large to admit of his free movement; it hangs so low on him that he cauged take a cartridge from his pouch, and he is more like a man tied hand and foot and carrying a burden, then a soldier to fight or to march. We sok for a New Pack for the Line, and let that Pack be tried on the men & feet bi inches, not on Guardsmen.

The List lement-Colonels of the Line will beer me out in our assertions that the men of 5 feet 6 inches cannot work under their packs, though we well know that, on a march, many of the short and stout rear-rank men carry them well : they are exceptions to the many. The axertions made to sling the Pack in the best manner, call for all the praise we can give the mealings Officers who have used them to benefit our bardy spidiers; but we would neggest the direction of the send and knowledge they possess, to produce the smallest and lightest Pack, capable of containing only the absolutely regulate Kit of a soldier. We believe that the French of the 52nd Light Infantry is smaller than

and not on tall mon-puly; not only on the valented bu the ordinary men of a Line Regiment. We too well know that whenever trials of any new article of Animomont in Equipment have been made, they have been tried by Guardsmen or selected men from the Line.

THE 60th, let Butt., we understand, has not yet inceived notice of the Franklency to which it will be sunt. We believe the present intention is to send it to Bembiy to relieve the 13th Light Infantry. The 83d and 61st is that cose will proceed to Bengal, and relieve the 3d and 40th Regiments. The general opinion among soldiers is that Bombay is the healthlest of the three Presidencies, but Bengal has many advantages in other respects over both Bombey and Madras. One Regiment will embert about the middle of July, the next in the end of July, and the third in August. This arrangement is judicious, especially in the case of the two Regiments press the same Presidency, where proper quarters sempet of be provided for two strong corps at the same time. The Regiments now embarking will arrive at the hest sense of the year, and thus undergo a seasoning before they have ater the hot weather or the raine.

THE recruiting of the Army, through the instrumentality of the pensioners and Staff of the Militis, has, we have reason to believe, long engaged the attention of the Military Authorities. To begin a new system, though a better, gives trouble to public servants, and it cannot be wondered at that the worst should be long followed. We would suggest most respectfully, that the Staff Offcers of pensioners should be empowered to perform all the duties of superintending Officers in the recruiting department, and that they should have lists from time to time farmished to them of regiments requiring recruits. that young men might select such corps as best suited them. The embodied pensioners ought to be encouraged in every possible manner to raise men for the Army ; and if these men were promptly paid, there is little doubt that they would exert their local influence, and in a short time become so well known in their districts, that every lud, willing to enter the Bervice, would know to whom to apply on the spot. Thus gradually might recruiting parties be restored to their regiments, and the present debauching system be abolished. It is notorious that the best recruits are those who voluntarily offer themselves at the head-quarters of regiments stationed in their native places; and if the Staff Officer and his pensioners are made known as recruiters, they will receive many men who now lack enlisters.

Wx do not anticipate much startling news from India by the coming Mail; but we feel convinced that events in the Punish will have already occurred sufficient to direct the attention of the Indian Government to their country. In our opinion it little matters who is Governor General, as far as mere interference in the affairs of the Punjab is concerned; for interference there must of necessity be. We frankly admit that we would hap preferred the retention of Land Ellenborough at the belm; but we as fairly admit that in Sir Henry Hardungs India bas been given a Governor sufficient for all the exigencles of pouce or war. There is a prevale opinion that Sir Renry Hardings has gone out to India pledged to a pacific policy; but this we know is not the case; it has been distinctly denied by the highest sutherity that he is bound down to follow any particular course. We therefore believe that the public in Inch and in this country will see very little change of F and that, before a year passes near, Sir Henry tlands will have been drawn by the content of events into a the same troubled waters through which the late Gorer General abity and abilifully stronged the season of the Brain in spite of the feable undernage his speciment from the and discontented efficiely under him. Sin,—On reading an account of the late Waterlow dinner at Apelsy House, it foreibly struck me that in teasting the Gazels, the Causity, the Senior Officer of the Artillery, and the Officers of the Mains, was, to my the least of it, a great oversight. In drinking the Army at large, thousands of mon and Officers were included who were not born when the Sattle was fought, and the teast campt therefore he constight more acaptionantary to Waterloo men than to any others.

Many changes of stations are alleged to be made as the Staff Officers of Putsianers in the Matter Kingdom. We believe that in the London Display there are to be six takes and a Field Officer, and that at all the large

We believe that the intention to encemp a force on the Current of Klideren promoter, has been abandoord. Certainly, as for as outward presences indicate the state of politics in Ireland, nothing out he more peaceable and orderly, nothing more free from disturbance or rebellion The gradual subsidence of the Repost-agitation is to us the best proof of its being an abandoned attempt. The alight sound, still heard of the ence headlong torrent are those only of a summer stream about to dry up. It may be at present a convenient measure to retain a strong force in Ireland-for if not meded to suppress rebellio it enables the Government to not more freely. In the event of any untoward turn in foreign relations, we have a force to check any sudden outbreak, and, we do not say it invidiously, we have in the Army now employed in Ireland, a force of the most efficient kind, in the highest state of discipline and equipment, to form the soldiers of necessity levied in haste on the breaking out of a war.

The Admiralty have been pleased to order, that the ay of the semant, belonging to the arest attached to the Dockyards, he stopped when on the Dector's List. Now. this is a pleas of Joe Hame sobnemy, unworthy of a liberal and consursative Administration. It is hard that men, many of whom have tolled, and fought, and bled for try for years should be thus treated. It is to be hoped that the Admiralty will not be long in rescinding such an injurious, ungeherous order, which cannot but have been sent forth unadvisedly.

In our last Number we alluded to the affair on the frontiers of Morosco, in which an attack had been made by some bands of Moors or Arabs on the division of General Lamorisides; since that, another skirmish of the same nature has taken place, in which the Moore were the seculiants :---in both instances they have been repulsed with loss, and it remains a matter of uncertainty how far these movements have been authorised or countenanced by the Emperor. If we were to argue on reasonable prohability, we should say that his entering into a contest with the French, in the present posture of affairs, would be an act of madness; he would have everything to lose be an act of madness; he would neve everything to lose and nothing to gain by exists step; but it is hard to judge how far he may be acted on by the turbulent disposition of the Chiefs, and distinct fanaticism. In this state of doubt affairs remain at the sent. To some quantions put by Lord John James, in the House, on this subject, Sir R. Peel made the heat he had every reason to he satisfied with the peeling intentions of the French Government; and we brust that there assurances will be falfilled; but some some maturally arise in our whi se returned to the round make an enter the whole aminable arrangement will be completed before the Prince de Joinville makes his oppearance; on the court; and are rather surprised he should have down intrusted with a command of that nature, where there was enything doubtful in the case. This going Admiral has no doubt felt a degree of envy this loar of his brothers have had opportunities of distinguishing themselves in war, from which he has been excluded; his vanity has been administered to by the noise his pemphlet has made; his wish at present seems to be to plant that warlike bearing to which a large portion of his countrymen are given and at once he steps from the dock of a frigate to the command of a squadron, said to be of three sail of the line, some frigates, and stansard, With such a force line, some frigates, and stehnsline, With such a force under his control, and prompted by the motives we have alluded to, we should be sorry to go accountly for his keeping the peace in any occurrence of acantital or equivocal pature. The French have expressed their wish to confine their sempeste to the limits of the stillent province of Algiera, but perhaps this is almost beyond their power; we have even that Abd-el-Kader, after all his reverses, takes refege within the dominions of Morneco, whomse

The wild tribes that the Emir sulists in his service, know weily little about theiterial limits, or the usages of stellined states; and searcely any force that the French can place on their frontier will be sble to guard it against predatory incursions. If irritated with this, they enter the territory of Morocco, and even get possession of the capital, it will be only increasing their embarresement, by adding the or ten millions of people to their enemies, account from to waste their troops and money in pursuit of an enemit that has the desert for a place of refuge, and every Museulman in Africa their friend at hours. friend at heart. The French have now above 100,000 men in Aigeria; if they were to deplie that number, they would not be much nearer the object they have in viewthe tranguil colonisation of the province; they never were very successful in that percer, and may therefore, with better grace, give up an attempt which was beyond the power of the Romans, the most succeeded of all colonists. WE have to record the death of an esteemed Correspondt-Retired Commander Jeaffresen Miles-who, under to signature of " An Old See Officer," was ever found rocating, in our pages, the cause of the Naval Service, high he loved with undiminished ardour; and more articularly in defending the Immertal Nelson from the persions of enemies and admissions of friends.

Commander Miles served with great gredit to himself, as an numerous certificates and letters teatify, from the year 99 till the general peace. He was in the Centaur with Samuel Hood at the capture of four French frigates if 1806, and gazetted for assisting in cutting out a priteer at Grand Canaria, in 1807. He was First Lieuhant of the Surprise frigate in the expadition to Washgton, but his services and cisims were of he avail to him, d he retired at the peace to the little village of Knapton. the sea-side, in Norfolk, where he ended his days on e 19th instant, regretted by all who knew him. His ging wish was that the Union Jack should supersade the ual funeral pall, and that he should be buried with the ast possible parade. His request was complied with, ad the ground has closed over one of England's most balous defenders. His vindication of Lord Nelson's protecdings in the bay of Naples was published a short me since, and can hardly fail of establishing its author's pject; it being a complete refutation of the calumnious Dinions but too generally received, based upon facts hich no sophistry can shake.

WHAT is the supreme Government to do for the troops in Scinde? This question rises naturally to every reflecting mind on examining the present state of affairs, particularly with reference to ficiade. Every Bengal Regiment ordered to that province, with the exception of the 6th Irregular Cavalry, has refused to march; and the Madras Sepays, if they consent to go, it is now clear, will insist on having double batta for their trouble. A writer in one of the Bengal journals mentions that the disinolination on the part of the troops of that presidency to proceed to Scinds, has nothing to do with the question of double batts, but urises from the reports which have reached them of the sickly nature of the country. Is that on execute, or done it sygravate the offered?

This fact may remind some of our readers of the enco-

One of them, the 14th (either Bengal or Madras), has actually on that account beau granted the motto " Tayar-O-Wufedar." It may not be generally known that at the time when the Bengal Government, with the perestal tenderness which it has always displayed towards its own shildren, when increase of emoluments, and increase of aumbers and increase of glory have been concerned, was assembling an ill concected regiment of volunteers for China; a Bumbay regiment, lately returned from foreign service, actually volunteered for that place! But the Chinese waters offered too rich a prize for the poor ducks to be allowed to paddle in them

Let us, however, revert to Scinde and to the Bombay Army there, and to the question-What is the Supreme Government to do now

Since 1838, of the twenty-eight regiments, European and Native, of the Bombay Army, twenty-three have been on foreign service, either in Scinde, the Petalen Gulf, or Aden. Of the remaining five, four were ordered to Som and would have then there now, but for the refractory spirit of the Madres troops, which has prevented their es movel from the stations where they at present remain. The whole of the Cavalry and corps of Sappers have served in Sciede, and nearly, if not, all the Artillery.

The Supreme Coverament cannot but be aware now o

the impolicy of sending to Boinds either Madres or Bengal troops, and will not, it is to be presumed, attempt to missence them in fitture to go there. The Bombey Army will thereby be allowed, if not positively obliged, to retain a country which it has purchased will the blood of many of its most gallent members. It is consequently useless to waste time in stricing to prove a now enfortdent pro-position, viz., that with the extent of its territory, both an regards Sounds and the Presidency of Bombay, its present regiment are altogether incompetent to the task of furnish-ing traces in a number sufficient for the exigencies of the Scate. This fast is best above by the numbers of Bom-bay Military stations, at present occupied by the Madmo-troops.

One of three results must follow, namely,:—1, The surbay Presidency, once Gaserst, must distance: 2d, a Bombey regiments upon by whitefearth from Silvale; i, the Bombey Army must hallocontend. This three sta-ic world be a palpable, highestic to the troops of shift. the Bombay regiments, when he becomed. This direction of the Bombay Army must believe to the troops of the residence; for it would disprise them of the only bouild stations they pessage disputant. Disawar, Killedgher

Shelapoet, Abmodunger, have all been occupied by the Madrae troops since 1938. If Pages, Melligenes, and Asparghur, which have also been partly occupied by the Madraeces, be accepted, Gapaient alone in loft, and Gapaient in notoriously the mass unhealthy tract (Sciede szoluded), within the dominious of the Hemourable Comsuccessed, within the dominious of the investment Com-panys. So that with Scinda and Gausers, for the gerrison-ing of which the Bombay Army in mow secrety sufficient in numbers, we shall indeed have a Golgotha—as the Sen-galore them Solude. Who in India can deny that this is not enforing enough for the Army of Bombay? Who will assert that it is not hard enough during the last fire years to see it debarred from all its own healthy atations atre Poose ?

The account result has been shown to be impolitic, and in the account rate of affairs it appears impossible. The third seems to be the safe and practical source for the Government of India. It is uncleas to stalk abjections from the entennes of increasing the Bombing Army in such atreas-stances; for they can be easily anastered. The necessity of an increase is admitted by the netural measures of the Government, which is reising irregular corps, such has added 100 men to each regiment of Bongal and Budras, for or willingly like the Rumber Army to the hards of the to go willingly like the Bumbay Army to the banks of the Indus. It may be thought, bec mee we in this island advocets the increase of the liumbay Army, that we have personal motives for such a measure. We do not seen that it will afford us pleasure to see the patient, long-custing, and devoted suidiers and Officers of the Army of this Presidency receive the recompensation morit; but our object thus urging the utility of augmenting this force is not mere parish policy;" It is based upon the experience hich every day demonstrates of the characteristics of the in thus urging the utility which every day Indian troops. It is not to be supposed that the present Governor-General, whose attachment to the Military is proverbial, can be ignorant of the fatility, and of the fruit iess waste of money consequent upon having unwieldy regiments now in ladia. With the steemers and effective regiments the tranquility of India will be effectually maintained; and by the same means the pussession of Scinde will be secured. Experience has shown that a regiment in this part of India is most available by its number being kept at 800 men. The late addition of 2500 men to this Army has added a mosthly sum to the Army expenditure of 18,200 rapess, without say proportionate benefit; whereas, if instead of that addition only two new an reised, the difference would be immediately felt-for they could escupy the Bombay stations or relieve an equal number of the regiments serviar on the Indus. These are the opinions of practical man; and they will, we are persuaded, if submitted to the consideration of the great Military authorities, find due weight. Suinds new forms a bright leaf in the laurely that adorn the Hombuy Army; its soldiers will willingly face disease and death to preserve them; and we beg leave to impress on the consideration of the "Boldier's Friand," and on the attention of the Parental Government of India, that it is neither meet nor just to tax the physical powers of their servents with oppressive bardens.

During the last five years twenty-one regiments of the Bombay Army have fought, bled, and suffered in various campaigns. The few regiments that have remained "at home" have had increased double duty during that period; all have chearfully done what was required from them. But, now, as there appears no prospect of railef for them from the other Presidencies, it is full time for to look for proper measures " in this Freeldency." prousunced impolitic and unjust to require the Bombay regiments that have not recovered from the toils of the campaigns and the sufferings of disease, to proceed snew to the spots and planes which others struggle to avoid; to the spots and planes which control members in discipling, but which they, like true soldiers, excellent in discipling, and faithful in allagiance, will never, when called for be duty, hesitate to approach." Example is better than prethe Bombey Army has nobly done the services required from it, and we are persuaded that the Supra Government of India and the Governor-General, British Government, and the whole British people, on learning its fidelity, its sufferings, its bravery, and its de-votations, will support up moreous of its numbers propertionare to its services, said to the exigencies of the State,

Assault.—Capt. Gardner and Lieut. Robinson, of the 44th Reg., were last week summoned before the Magistrates of Plyymouth, charged with an assault on a woman. The Magistrates retired to consider their judgment, and having been absent about half an hour, ser, account addressing the defendants said, the Magistrates had given their best attention to the infamous case of assault which had been brought before them, and so far as Lieutenant Robinson was concerned, they were of opinion that he was guilty of the assunt alleged against him, and adjudged him to pay a fine of 51. With respect to Capt. Gardner, the evidence did not so clearly shew that he was present, and, therefore, the case as against him was dismissed .-Plumouth Independent.

The Guernup "Conspiracy,"—By this day's packet a dispatch was received by the Bailiff from the Secretary of State for the Home Department, which was communicated to the magistrates at a private meeting of the Court assembled in consequence. At four o'clock the deputy-sheriff was sent to the prison for Mr. Dobrée, and on his arrival the public were admitted. The prisoner having been placed at the bar, the Queen's Procureur said that as Mr. Dobrée had been committed for having refused to snawer a question relating to a charge of conspiracy, and the Secretary of State having now informed the Court that it had not been his intention that the inquiry should he directed to any other end than to ascertain whether acditions language had been used, and not to the charge of conspiracy, upon which alone Mr. Dobrée's evidence sen required, he (the Procureur) was of opinion r. Dobrée might be discharged. The Court heing that Mr. Dobrée might be discharged. The Court being of opinion that the charge of conspiracy had entirely fallon to the ground, and that it was upon this charge only that Mr. Dobrés's svidence was required, considered that it was not necessary to the ends of justice that he should be any longer imprisoned. The Bailiff communi-cated this decision to Mr. Dobrée, who thereupon retired from the bar without making any observation.—Guernsey Star. June 20.

Steum Power .- A pint of water may be evaporated by two ounces of coals. In its evaporation its wells into 216 gallons of steam, with a mechanical force sufficient to raise a weight of 37 tons a feet high. The steam thus produced has a pressure equal to that of common atmospheric air; and by allowing it to expand by virtue of its clusticity, a further mechanical force may be obtained, at least, equal in amount to the former. A pint of water, thursfore, and two ounces of coals, are thus rendered estherefore, and two ounces of conts, are thus rendered ca-pable of doing as much work as is equivalent to seventy-four tofts raised a footlyich. The circum-stances under which the steam-night is worked on a railway are not favourable to the economy of fuel. Nevertheless, a pound of coke burned in a locu-mative engine will evaporate about five pints of water. In their evaporation they will exert a mechanical force sufficlent to draw two tons on the railway a distance of one mile in two minutes. Four horses working in a stage on a common road are necessary to draw the same weight the same distance in als minutes.

Ethnological Society.—Sir Charles Malcolm, Presi-

The last meeting of the session was chair. held on Wednesday, when a paper was read "On the Intellectual Character of the Esquimans, by Dr. King, the Secretary, being the last of a series of three papers hald before the Society, forming a complete history of this arctic family. The author pronounced the data upon which Land Kames, Herder, and Dr. Prichard have expended considerable learning and ingenious reasoning, to be wholly incorrect as far as the Esquimanx are concerned. Of the general disposition of this nation of fishermen, Dr. King speaks in the most fiveurable terms; and their intelligence, compared with uncivilued man in general, of a high order, as evinced in their social babits, their marrings veromonies, their funeral rites, their ares and manufactures, their commercial relations, and in the education of their children. They are poly gamists, but they rarely have more than two wives, and only one if she has issue; and the women have the same privilege as to the number of husbands. At Melville Pennsula and Regent's Inlet, cousins are allowed to marry, but a man must not wed two sisters, while at Greenland marriage between cousins is tare. A son-inlaw or daughter-in-law does not consider tather-in-law or mother-in-law in the light of relations. If a box and girl although in no way related, have been brought up togethar, they are looked upon as brother and sister, and ere not allowed to marry. When there are no children it is not allowed to marry. When there are no children it is considered a reproach to both parties, but the poor woman generally gets the most blame, except she is a wise woman, and then she obtains another husband, and has another chance.

New Panorama.-We were present yesterday at a private view of another new paneramic picture, by the ever active and indefatigable Mr. Burford, of Leicestersquare. The subject he has this time chosen for illustra-tion by his pencil is the "Ruins of Basibec," the ancient Heliopolis, at the foot of Mount Lebenon in Syria; and a subject more gratifying to the eye of the historic reader, the antiquary, the traveller, or the lover of travels, could not easily have been selected. The ruins—beautiful, grand, and magnificent in their decay—of the great temple of the sun, and of the smaller Roman temple, amongst the finest remains of antiquity, and the art of the painter has here been most happily dis-played. So hold and imposing are the objects—so fine is the acrial perspective—so exquisite is the sky—that the eye dwells upon the scene in a state of the most deliciously calm and contemplative repose. It is a scene that we could gaze upon for hours, lost in wonder The sun-lights and shadows are the and admiration. sun-lights and shadows of nature; and the relief is so strong, and so correct, as almost to amount to illusion. Artistically considered, this is one of the finest paintings that Mr. Burford ever produced.—The view of Hong-Kong, and that of Baden-Baden, still remain open.

MONDAY, June 22.—Opening of Letters.—Mr. T. Duncomma presented a petition from Charles Stoizherg, a Pulish refugee, complaining of the opening of his letters by the Frest-office suctionities. The hon. member stated at lengths the grounds of complaint made by this gentleman, as well as by M. Mazzini, whose complaint and been before the frome a few sign between M. Mazzini selected that from nixty to seventy letters addressed to him had been operaed since the beginning of State leaf, that, in opening his letters, every care had been taken in a well as included in the horizontal that impressions had been taken from the early, and from these the opening letters were re-scaled; sodified the cut was made so clean, that it required almost a missymbole is discover it. There were also, he said, double impressions made with the Post-office abone, as that the day wise the latters were received at the Post-office might not appear. But Mazzini and Stoizberg was valued that their correspondence constained anything to warrant such explange. Mr. Duncombe moved "that the Post-too of Ongala Charles Bioliburg the referred to a select committee, in critica to inside the system had been insued by the House Office for the opening of letters, and how these warrants had been obeyed. He had acted in conformity with precedent, and had not carried the practice of opening letters beyond that which was pursued by Mr. For and Lord Grosville. Such a committee as this sought would be neconsistent with justice to individuals, and most permitions to the public interests.—Lord J. Russett., agreeing in the necessity of such a power to be consided to the discretion of the Secretary of State, thought that Sir James (Ornhym's should have stated the general principles on which he exercised it. "This power," each the Noble Lord, "was given to meet public danger, whether the state from a sense of strund—whether from a public danger is insmissed or not. But the Right Hon. Gentleman takes no such ground; and he does not enable us to say whether this power has been used abrond—whether from a public enemy trying to raise insurrection within the realm, or an enemy within our own income, having the same object in view. In such cases the Berretary of Siste must judge whether the public danger is insuspent or not. I should say that for such as present this power has been used for the purpose of assisting foreign Governments or not. I should say that for such a perpose it would be a most unjustifiable use of such a power. Eard John Rassell having instanced a similar case, is which Lerd Melbourns, when Home Beerstary, had consented to a committee of inquiry, called on the House to assert its right, and insist on having an explanation of these transactions.—Mr. M. Mittwes regretting that his James Graham could not state that he had not communicated to the agents of accomplished manners, fled to the committee of inquiry.—Mr. Share, at the charge against the Minister, in his imaginative style, thus:—An unfortunate itslam refuges, a mass of accomplished manners, fled to the country as a sanctuary for freedom, after having been engaged in an unfortunate but generous attempt to restore freedom to his native country, and an English Minister, acting to this case with an un-English heart, had, by the instrumentality of his power, lent humself to the pronuntion of evidence for a foreign Minister against an exile, by a revealment of secrets entrusted to the faith of our Post-office, by which the property, may, perhaps the life of this exile's correspondents and irented might be placed in acquarted him that the Home Recretary were in the same house in property. The writer is evidently young, but his book is a book of lively promise. He has much of the truly heautiful and poetic in feeling. Were it not for the painful incident of the falcon, (derived, if we mistake not, from Boccaceto) the piece entitled "Sir Hubert" would be our decided favourite; for it has, smidst what we conceive to be the inherent feutes of the school, great sweetness, great delicesty, great truth and force of painting—that "love, by all beloved"—that "lovely love, that comes to all!"
We offer the first two stanzas of the "Prologue" to " Bir Hubert :"-

These volumes are, from the very nature of their subject, of an exceedingly beguling mature. The mere enumeration of between sixty and bevesty names of women whom we have seen, admired, and been delighted with, some of them long since "hearesed in death," conjurts up a host of—if we may so express oursidess—"forgotten memorial in the first test and district the hear." Our fair author has thoroughly grasped the character of Joan of Arc: we really think the must be character of Josa of Arc: we reary union the mote on herself a soldier's daughter. The Count Dunois and Agnes Surel are fairly sketched; and the awayt and gentle Alice, daughter of the English Regent, is very charmingly introduced. Here and there, in the course of the spirited introduced. Here and there, in the course of the spirited and unflagging narrative, none little verbel insemented coour; but they are almost ton unimportant for critical notice. On the other hand, the religious tone of the writer's occasional reflections proves that she has been educated in a wise and plous school. We care not how coon we may again have the pleasure of meeting this "young lady."

REGIMENTS FOR FORZIGN SERVICE.
To the Editor of the Namel and Military Gazette.

Sin,—Your correspondent, Un Ancien, bears me out in the meertien I made, that the injustice of sending the 53d, 60th, and 61st Regiments to India, was alike unnecessity and macalled for. He states "that they are to go out during the summer;" and I say that they ought not to go (to India) at all on their next tour of foreign service, when we have so many regiments that have returned from good stations abroad, whose turn for foreign service would done round after the three regiments in question should have embarked for other stations, and that have not been in India for a much longer time than has elapsed since the return in 1823-4 of 53d Regiment from the East Indies. We have the 72d (home longer than 53d or 60th) that has never served anywhere but at the Cape, and which bean never served anywhere but at home another year, and then sent to relieve 27th Regiment on that station. We have the 11th and 15th, both of which have had excellent foreign stations; the former has not served contward for many years; the 15th never served in the East.

Un Anoton says...." The Aret Battalion, 60th, like all the Rife corps, had always favourable foreign attions, until it was deemed indispensable to bring them into 'the general Lipe' duties, and the second Battalion was (then) sent to Jamaica:' what on earth has the foreign service of the second Battalion, 60th, to do with that of the first Battalion? Un Anoton, in mentioning the flat Regiment, attaca that this corps is no worse used in being sent to India for 20 years (after, mark, nine years in Jamaica and eleven in Ceylon, on its last two services abroad) than almost any other Infantry corps. What, lat me ask, have been the two last foreign stations of the following Infantry corps?—7th, 6th (a few years, and very faw, in Jamaica), 11th, 15th, 23d, 32d, 42d, 43d, 52d; 68th (three years in Jamaica), 70th (ditto, West Indies), 71st, 72d, 75th, 79th, 81st, 85th, 88th, and both Hattalions of Rifle Brigade. I think Un Anoton cannot trace much castern service in the catalogue of regiments I have here furnished bim.

regiments I have here furnished him.

You know, Sir, that during the half-dozen years I have been permitted the honour of corresponding with you, I have, in my communications, ever had but one object in view, the good of the Service; and that I have exposed partial and unfair conduct in the selection of foreign stations, just as madily where regiments in which I had many friends, were henefited, as in cases where they were to be injured. I have not even seen the 53d since May, 1828; the 60th and 61st I do not know an Officer in; and the latter corps it has never been my good fortune to meet. On the other hand, I have many esteemed friends in some of the regiments I have mentioned as those that ought to desput to India in place of the 53d, 60th, and 61st. You also know, Sir, that other pursuits prevent my discussing this subject further.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

To the Biditor of the Naval and Milling Ganette.

Sin,—Your remarks in the last Gauctic, upon the mischief done by Lord William Beutinck, in abolishing Corporal Punishment in the Native India Army, cannot fail, I think, to meet the general concurrence of Military men. It always appeared to me that Lord W. Bentinck's order for that perpose would, under all the circumstances, have justified an impaschment.

Some time previous, he directed a Board from each of the three Presidencies to examine the subject fully, and to report their opinions upon the expediency of abolishing Corporal Punishment in the Native Army. All these Boards, which were composed of some of the most experienced and able Officers of the Company's Service, declared their opinion to be opinioned to the abolition; they deemed it indispensable that the punishment should be retained, though limited in its application; their opinions agreed essentially with those which were given on the same question by the Commission which was authorized to make a similar income in Emphrei.

opinions agreed essentially with those which were given on the same question by the Commission which was authorised to make a similar inquiry in England.

In the face of these reports, in direct contradiction to the opinions of Officers of the highest reputation for ability and experience, Lord W. Bentinek, by a stroke of his pen, ordered Corporal Punishment at once to cease in the Native Army. This most agtraordinary order was issued shortly before he left India, and it could only be considered as a popularity hunting claphrap, to suit the clamour of the day, upon his arrival in England. Indeed, it is beyond doubt that his election for Gleagow was greatly assisted, amongst the numerous radical portion of the constitution, by a proceeding so congenial to their views, as tending so directly to weaken authority, and impair disciplies. But, Sir, was aver a more recklass act perpetrated? To abolish a punishment is the Native Army, which was still retained, though rarely resorted to, in the Royal Army; to the troops of which, serving in

The consequence is now shown in the necessary, but embarrassing re-establishment of a punishment, acknowledged to be indispensable for the maintenance of discipline. It always appeared to me that Lord W. Bentinck's act was too little noticed at the time.

NAVAL UNIFORMS.

To the Relitor of the Nevel and Melitary Gazette.

Srn,...With all the elterations and regulations made in respect to Uniforms in the Navy, we are at a loss to discover, unless with a minfoscope, one grade from another. In walking through the streets yesterday, I meet an Offiner in uniform, who, I was informed, held the rank of Mate; two others followed, whom I took to be Mates also, the Uniform appearing the same; but I was surprised to hear that one was an engineer and the other his apprantice.

THE LANCE.

To the Editor of the Naval and Military Gaustie.

Sin.—Having seen more than once in the columns of your Gazette, the lance deprecated, not only on account of its own attributed domerits as a weapon, but as one not adapted to the British Light Dragoon; and having, more over remarked, that the reasons alleged for its supposed worthlessness, and for its abolition in our Service, have been really most vague, and affecting in no way the calms of the arm itself. I am led to believe that the true and paramount reason for the objections reised to it, has not, in reality, been urged, as the confessions which it would adduce would somewhat (as the objectors no doubt felt), affect their national Military self-love, which however pardonable as a virtuous weakness, should, to become a real virtue, eschew no candour, where the interest of the Service may be concerned.

What is the real reason why the lance is less a waspon for the British Light Dregoon, than for the Light Dragoon, or Uhlan of Austria, Russia, or Prussia? The reasons argued have been, "the pancity of our regiments of Light Cavalry," "the nature of colonial service," an affected dislike of an imitation, supposed to have been suggested, to pendente the vanity and love of parade of a late Royal personant had, &c. The latter reason urged, save the mark I was a late of the latter reason urged, save the mark I was a late of the latter reason urged, save the mark I was a late of the latter reason urged, save the mark I was a late of the latter reason urged, save the mark I was a late of the latter of all, in Millitary matters particularly, (having no natural genius that way of its own) which, however, he it observed, should not be deemed a fault, for it is in the very spirit of the art of wer to perfect it, by the adoption and trial of every means suggested and in use among other nations.

But without in any way impugning the Military capabilities of my countrymen, which I would rather in all reason uphoid. I am seriously inclined to think, deduced from observation, that the real senret of the supposed inefficiency of the lance in the hands of a British Light Dragoon, lies more in a real sense of the want of skill and aptitude evinced in its bearing and exercise by our finefillows, who have not as yet had an oppartunity of showing what they can do after their own fashion on a continental field, with an erm the most difficult of all to wield skilfully, and which skill can only be acquired either by early use and habit, as with the Poles and Cosacks, or of the most constant and indefinityable exercise and study of its qualities as on arm, which, nevertheless, requires, like the sabre, less of Merculean strength in its use, than it does of aptitude and advoltness, and with which proficiency may be obtained by practice, and study, as much as with the asbre itself.

No, Sir, the fault lies not in the weapon—not a bit of it—but in the laxity of the instruction to overcome the natural implicated of the pupils. Hence, Sir, the fault may be remedied; and nothing will contribute to impart as perfect cognisance of the merits of the fauce, and a thorough command of its powers to one Lawers, so much as the catillalament of monthly careatiels, in which the men who most distinguish themselves by their skill and expertues in the use of their strip, should receive a triling reward from their Commanding Officer as an incentive to their application and effects. A know, impresentive to their application and effects. A know, impresentive to the application and effects when exhibitions have on the character of the shifter; and would recommend, aye, even the imitation effects.

It has been urged that British soldiers have defeated their opponents without such weapons; and spon the first introduction of the arquebus, it solght have been urged against it (sud was for sught I know) that soldiers managed to kill such other to their provider that statement with the old pike, and that their their the regions made of lunding that arm was time lust, while the olde, mereuves, were against the shot telling after all! The lance may have been considered by many as merely a gay, martiallooking adjusts to the dress of the soldier in this country.

That it has been thought so, and considered as possessing little or no intrinsic value, is not, however, to be laid to the score of the weapon. If its merits have not been understood, and their study deemed as beneath the attention of our Military men, we must rather blame the men than the instrument. And it is an erroneous idea to imagine that the labor has been adopted in the Russian, Prussian, and Austrian Armbes for the sake of show; it had never been thrownsmide, for its merits were too well understood.

"Le lance set le reine des armes," says Montésuculi, and that gentleman knew what he was talking about; it is, moreover, an acknowledged exiom of old superienced Officers over the water, that, of all arms, it produces the greatest moral impression upon an enemy.
Every arm has, however, its advantages and defects; it is the lot of all luman things, then why not of things inhuman among the rest? The sabre, it is true, is more portable, more handy in a melée of Cavalry, and for close combat; but to break a squadron, to pursue either Cavalry or Infantry, and against Infantry, upon many occasions the lance is indisputably far superior. The Foot soldier dreads the lance much more than the sabre;
he knows, he feels, that he can keep the Dragoon at a respectful distance with his bayonet, but he cannot keep off the lance, it is so awkwardly long;—to repel a charge of Lancers the Infantry can rely alone upon their fire, while against the sabre of the Dragoons their beyonet is sufficient protection. The Uhian unites in himself the advantage of both weapons; be charges a squadron, or Infantry, with lauce in rest, and in the melfe, throwing his lance into his left arm, he uses his sabre with equal readiness and skill.

The lance, well handled, is not the insignificant arm some would be pleased to represent it, but stands fore-most among all, for the effect it produces on the mind of an opponent, and its thrust is pre-eminently deadly.

In the use of the lance in the field, it should be taken

In the use of the lance in the field, it should be taken as a fundamental principle that the rider must consider himself as the centre point of a circle, the radus of which is described by the point of his weapon. The Lancer should alone direct his thrusts in the direction of the half-circle before him; the other half of the circle in his rear must be protected by the awinging parades of his weapon.

The thrusts are alone certain when the finger-nails are turned upwards, and that the fore-arm and body support the lance in its direction. Where these rules are not complied with, the Lencer must never attend.

Hence, the use of the lance in the field should be confined to the thrusts; front, right and left, right and left to the ground; the parades, right and left to the side, and those of the swinging of the lance. If the Uhlan is pursued, he must defend himself from his approaching apponent by side parades right and left, and by swinging the lance, which, when well executed, afford a powerful defence; for the blow will either strike his pursuer or his horse's head, and the weight of the weapon increasing two-fold the force of the swing-power, will assuredly knock him out of his saddle, or bring his horse to a sudden stand still.

The parades must always be vigorously executed, and effected only by the motion of the fore-arm, for if the body sway and work too much thereby, the firmness of the cest is endangered, and the saddle may readily twist in the operation.

The object thing to insure an effective defensive, or offensive parade, is the correct and ready calculation of the time requisite for the lance to describe the circle it has to make.

In the thrust, the lance must always rest in the full grasp of the hand, as directed above, the nails turned upwards, and no motion at any time made whereby the latter become turned the awards, as the weight of the wespon will assist the alightest parade of the enemy to strike it from the hand.

The igner must always be supported by the body and fore-arm, by which the thrust sequires a much greater certainty in its direction, and a great increase of force.

currenty in its direction, and a great increase of fords.

The shorter the thrusts are made the greater their rapidity and certainty. The too great backward bending of the arms, to give a forward thrust, is useless and even dangerous, without such effort the thrust is always forcible and long enough to pierce a man home.

In the field, the lauce, like the sabre, must always be sharpenedly with a good point, and well grassed; for on its good-residition depends the infliction of such weineds as will clashly the opposent. Hence the laune must never be thrust point downwards toto the south. The piezons, when before the enemy, analyticipals well sented to

The writer of the clever publication written in 1839, and signed "One of the People," I think heards much too sweeping an apinion in eaying that ships-of-the-line will be driven from the seema by steemary; that the stanners, with their few mortar-guns and roomy decks, will be as efficient as a ship of 80 or 100 guns, as they will have the power of setting fire to, and destroying their opponents; consequently, "there can be no use in expessing 600 or 800 men to certain destruction, when all that they outld possibly effect may be as well done by 200 or 300; and it will soon be seen that there is little economy in using a ship worth 100,0004 in a species of warfare when she can worth 100,000% in a species of warfare when she can hardly fail to be destroyed by another of comparatively small value."

The sheet anchor of the Pringagula and the Madague, hall fitted on rigging, and stows his sucher more on beard. The chart anchors of the Britsenia and the Redway, both fitted on Mr. Brown's plan, were let go, and nothing could demonstrate the admirable plan more completely then the way in which they both west off from the ships' sides into the water. We next find him appointed to the Hippomenes sloop, of 18 guns and 120 men, Capt. Shortly after, he had the misfortune to be shot through the elbow-joint while attempting to apprehend a party of desertors, and so severe was the wound that he was forced to invalid, and took his passage home on board the Horon, alsop, with convoy bound to Tortola. During the voyage the Horon was attacked and boarded by a French privateer, but through the gallantry of the Captain, and intrepidity of the crew, the enemy were beaten off and repulsed with great slaughter. SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1844.

THE hopes of a Brevet have been extinguished, by the cold water cast on the proposition, both at Horne Guarda and the Admiralty.

THERE is an evidently increasing interest in the affairs of India. The day has passed when the very name of India was met with the indifference of ignorance or the deaf ear of spathy. If the British Empire had derived no other benefit than this from steam, there would be reason for some exultation. The rapid communication between London and Bombay has, at last, brought people in this country to think, and feel an interest in our great and glorious Eastern Empire: to even look with anxiety for the monthly mail, and to read its contents with

The abstract of Indian in Miligence fully bears out our anticipations regarding the Impah. Events there have been long tending to that safe which will demand our armed interference; and the report attempts made to tamper with the Sipaheen must expedite that interference in our own defence. Indeed the preparations already in progress for steembling in August a force of 80,000 mean on the Sutledge, indicate the diagrous position in which our frontier and its neighbouring territoiles are plause, and the timely interference of British poles, near year and the market influence in that contrament, or briefless are plause. paramount influence in that government, or bringing the country under our own immediate rule. The state of the Punjab cannot remain as it is: we are in the position of the man who has the next house to his on fire. "Procinity ardel Usalegon."

In Scinde, sickness does not appear to have been prevalent. Sir Charles Napier, we understand, is about to vaient. our Granus respier, we understand, is about to make stipulations, of mutual advantage, with the Beloc-thee chiefs. Rather an absurd statement has been made of their numbers,—700 and no 17,000 is near the truth, and this includes their attendants. All that an able, generous, and palism Governer can do, seems to be doing by Sir Charles Napler; and we angur much benefit from the interview he was to hold with these brave chieftains on the 24th May. The Babochese respect a soldier, but they have a small accusation for abilities whether but they have a special contempt for civilians, whether native or European. In Gwalior our arrangements have given general satis faction to the people, but invigues had been on foot, which we have put down with a strong hand. In short, throughout British India, our power was never more firmly administered or more cheerfully obeyed. Lord Bilenborough's Government has been crowned with success in every quarter, and he will have the proud office to perform, on his return to this hountry, of pointing to the good deeds he has done fort British bonour and Indian wulfare; while his enemies from at most only point at some rather high-flown words for some uncivil expressions. One Battalion to each Presidency is talked of, and we hope soon to aunounce that the message has received the sanction of the Baird of Control.

The above augmentation, with the addition of one Cap-tain to each regiment, which Sir Henry Hardings is authorised to great on his arrival in India, will meterially add to the efficiency of the Indian Army.

"Erom the went of cenals and reeds and navigable rivers, sepecially in the western provinces of France, all the ports on the Atlantic are effectually cut off from soumessessions with the laterior. This might appear to furnish an additional motive for keeping up active communications by sea; but such is not the case, and except at Havre, Nantes, and Hordesex, which are the keys of the Scine, the Loire, and the Giarotme, the quest of France is, to use M. Affichel Chevaller's expression, in duct de bloove du côté de la totre. One of the mast consequences of this state of themes is and were as measure on colo so to totte. One of the most important consequences of this state of things is that, as mone of the French ports have a supply of configuration reach, they do not peness the first and most amountal condition of steem navigation.

"All our merituse departments," mays ill. Chevaller, "from Baymans to Havra, having no Front's configlio within reads, and being destitude of means of mavigation to bring faviline coal from the neighbouring ports at a low tute, he've been officed up to this time to pay exemitant prices for this something like","

Yet with respect to coal, Marsellies and Toulou are better placed than the French ports on the oven; for the coal of St. Etienne (which is good) comes to the count by the Rhone, and that of Alais (which is inferior), by the railroad to Nismes and Beaucairs. In the event of an our it is needless to add that the fetrigit supply would be atopped; the French coasting trade would be interrupted, and there exist no means of interact water communication to feed the principal western ports with coal from the laterior. The price of the combustible weald become enormous, and the circumstance would tall with become enormous, and this circumstance would tell with fatal effect, not only on steem navigation, but on all the various undertakings in the ports which are dependent on supplies of fereign coal."

Next, with reference to Iron, and the means of working that metal :-

"Until a recent period, a considerable portion of the steam machinery on board French vessels was of English origin; and it remains to be seen whether those engineering establishments which were auddenly und ing establishments which were suddenly and rather violently called into existence by the events of 1840, have produced marine engines equal alter in solidity or in effect to thuse made in England. It may also be doubted whether, at the present prices of iron in France (which are double our own), and with the present demand for engines in that country, large engineering establishments can be profitably sarried on, without at least nutring such arrives on the marking and her anothers. establishments can be profitably carried on, without at least putting each prices on the machinery they produce as must act as a serious about on the extension and improvement of such origines. It is the constant and general demand for steam machinery, not only for the sea but for all other purposes, and not only for England but for the world, that has created and etill supports the rast establishments of Mandelay, Miller, Fawesti, Nupler, Seaward, &c. Na doubt, as the Prinon de Johnville affirms, the work of the Government is better done by each private establishments as these, than by the done by each private establishments as these, than by the engineering departments of the French assemble; but such establishments are not to be created by Guvernment patronage, our can they subsist without the general and constant demand for commercial purposes. Commerce stands England strong in good sailers, and sommerce has stade her strong in proctical engineers. The Naval sahadi et Augouldma will no more produce the former, then the Ecoles des Arts et Métiers of Châlons, Angere, Todoues, Aiz, &c., will furnish the latter. To this Bullouse, Air, de, will furnish the latter. To this result the ship and the shop are alike essential, but ships and shops will not be built unless called for by trade.";

"Cortain it is that, in sine cases out of ten, a traveller who chances to emburk on a French straner, not forming part of the Royal Navy, will find (to bie great relief) that she has English engines and is burning English coul under the superintendencies of a true Eritish "stoker,...a marridius personnes who hide fale to rival, though not we treat to seperade, the British ter,"

"The Prince is of opinion that steam navigation has clamaged the sepect of things, and that it anables France to supply by her Military resources what she may lack in Maral atraggit. Perhaps there larks at the betten of their and some similar sentences, a notice that steam tagtist will revive's sort of galley-warfare, in which the settles will revive's sort of galley-warfare, in which the settlem, and the reseal itself would become the principal singles of destruction. Nothing can be more unfounded that the whole assumption, that the British Admirally have residened to give up the wouden wells of old England; and that they are prepared to confide the delence of the British flag and of the British ampire to a steam fleet, inverse; of the British empire to a summer lists is acoust, or however well appointed. It is preposterous to argue from the program of the British Navy at a time of the mast profound peace, what may be the nature of the mast profound peace, what may be the nature of the mast profound the event of a war. But however rapid the program of attem navigation may have been as a novel and important branch of the Navy, there probably never was a period to the history of this country when more separate to Naval actions was devoted to the whole subject of Naval architecture, or when more now ships of the line ware prepared for future nontingenesis.

"It is a nerrow and distorted view of human affairs to talk of commercial relations at the assuage of any possible matient, for if the ships and mapufactures of Regiand are used in all the markets of the world, it is because in all these markets for the world, it is because in all these markets England is either the best quetomir, or affords the most convenient means of exchange. To a war on commerce is to make war, not on England, bu rland, but on human race; it is to raise armed barriers, not against the speculations of a single people, but against the neces-sary interchange of the produce of the world and of mankind; and if such a system of warfare could be successfully prosecuted (which it festunetely cannot) the inevitable consequence would be the relapse of all mations into that state of barbarism, from which the extension of their commercial relations with each other has slowly awakened

Judging of the whole from parts, our readers will readily and justly infer that the entire article, from which we have made these extracts, will well repay them for the labour of perusal.

We have frequently called the attention of the Ordnance Department to the shameful abuse to which the Officers and soldiers of the Army are subjected on account of Barrack damages : and although our semonstrances from time to time have as yet proved unaveiling, the Service may rest assured we mover shall give over using our most streamens endeavours, as Military Journalists, to bring about a different and improved system; indeed, we are more than surprised at the obstitutey of the Authorities in so long delaying (after the many instances we have brought forward of this abuse), to have a searching investigation futu the whole system of assessing and collecting Barrack damages; and we must respectfully suggest to the Master General, that he should call upon Commanding Officers of Regiments for a special report of the way in which their corps have been hitherto subjected to charges of this kind, and calling also upon them to suggest what would be the most advantageous plan to pursus so as to do full justice to the soldier, and the lasure ample pre-vision for the repairs of such Barrick damages as are wilfully made; but in all cases to allow for fair wear and tear. Two latest accounts from America inform as that the enate has rejected the wholesale robbery proposed by President Tyler, in the appearation of Texas; or, in other, words, has refused to edd another repudiating state to th North American Union. Every men possessed of common honour and honesty on both sides of the Atlantic must be rejoiced at this result, and fervently hope that no such stain may at a future day throw discredit on a government that pretends to any civilisation; for what is it, stripped of all the verbiage, but the seignre of a province belonging originally to a friendly and neighbouring nation, and creating a fresh mart for the sale of slaves this aggression, too, perpairated against a state just apringing into existence, ofter emancipation from European Government, and so wetkened by internal disension as to be incorpable of defending its frontier. Splendid soblevement for the "free and enlightene citizens" of the model Republic! Balked in his Arat attempt with the Sounts, the persons President sends a message to the House of Representatives, which may be allowed to take the leed of all the verbose and empty state documents that ever emanated from the West. He tells those he addresses, that pending the discussion in the Senats, he refreized from making any communication to the Representatives, out of delicacy; and he flatters them with the hint that although rejected in one place, he hopes It will find favour in another; he tells them that any attempt at pegotiation on the subject with Mexico would be of no avail, groing that that country looked on Texas as a received province; therefore, says the President, very logically, " the shortest way is to take possession at once, and settle afterwards the future frontier with Mexico a pleasant mode of making the whole affair what is calk an open question, and placing it at the discretion of the American Government where the frontier line shall be. He alludes to the letter from Mr. Everett, giving to account of a conversation that took place in the Mouse of Lords, and then exclaims, "What right con such a country have to find fault with the agreement on that has at all times shown the greatest desire for appr in this way !" The reader will no doubt expect examples to be furnished by this western philosopher and statesman, and we have little doubt be will be astendated when he learns what they are. THE OVERLAND MAIL.

THE letest dates are from Bombay to 20th, and from Calcutta to 11th May; from Macao to 16th, sad Hong-Kong to 8th April. The mail from England of 6th April Calcutta to 11th may; from Manno to 10th, and Heng-Kong to 8th April. The until from Engiand of 6th April had reached Bombay on 12th May.

The principal intelligence brought by the Indian mail of 20th May relates to the state of the Punjanb, which appears now to be more distracted than ever. A bloody fight is disted to have taken place on 7th May, between Heern Singh, the present Prime Minister, and the party of the sons of Runjeet Singh, who are cappeard to him, led on by Ittur Singh, a chief of considerable influence. In Sopt, isst, when Aject Singh had sourdened the then King, Shere Singh, and the Prime Minister, Dayon Singh, he was himself alain in a fight with Heern Singh, who dienged the death of his father, Dhyan, by grearing all the family of Aject to be betchered. One hey of nine years was allowed to live, and an uncle, named Itter off, Utter Singh, escaped into the Sikh States, protected by the British. After seven months' realisance, he went back on the 50th of April, and joined the party under Cashmeers Singh and Peshere Singh. They proceeded to attack Heers Singh, and a bloody conflict took place, in attack Heera Singh, and a bloody conflict took which Heera was said to have been wounded ook place, in andre. Ittur Singh was considered by some of the partisant of Heera as being supported by the British, and they therefore, have threatened to invade the territories of the letter, to revenge themselves on those who had countenanced the proceedings of Itter Singh.

The threatened movement of the notorious Ackber Khan on Penhawar had not taken place. The position of his father, Dhost Mahomed, was by no means satisfactory;

inhobitants; as it was going to rain under the Makintta yele. If One of the fineheating chiefs of Singhilland bas had his costle levelled to the parth, and is himself a prisoner, is consequence of his refered to chery the orders of the Supreme Government, and to rective some plumber which he had taken from none merelimine, British subjects, who were travelling through the country. This ilesided act of the British subjects is highly acceptable to the syste and tradesmen, who are delighted when those putsy tyreste are pusished for their sotheries and insolence.

The other parts of India were tranquil, and expected be so during the rainy sesson.

Garrison Etiquette at Calcutta.—The Englishman of May affords a long account of a much-talked-of matter in Calcutta stroke, which, for predent reasons, had not been noticed in the journals. It seems, Mr. Montressor, of the Bongal Barvice, drove a begy into one of the gates of Fort William, and was stopped by the sentinel, because a dag was in the buggy, contrary to the Fort Regulations. Mr. Montressor struck the sentinel with a whip, and indicted the like upon a havilder who came out, whole was acational. On the circumstance being reported to the Governar-General, his Lordship ordered that Mr. Montressor should be dismissed the Bervice. Intercession was maile. His Lordship opposed to withdraw the order, dit condition that an applopay, dictated by himself, and contibed in the most humbis language, chantid be read by Mr. Montressor to the Guard, who were to be assembled for the purpose, and a timelation handed them is the Hindestane language. Further, the effecting gentleman should with into the Fort for the purpose at delivering the apology; and this met having both literally compiled with at tirs, was actually indeed tipon and performed. The Muricarus of May 6 questions the sorrections of the ecount of the proceedings in Mr. Montressor's one. In his calm aponents that gualismes was the first to acknowledge his error, and analous the seals all mossible remarkation. The threatened movement of the actorious Askbar Khan on Peshawar had not taken place. The position of his father, Dhost Mishosened, was by an means estimatory; his saye, his infarnities, and the complicated state of the affairs of Cahool weekl, it was thought, induce him to resign his covereignty jate the heads of Askbar.

COURT-MARTIAL-LEROT. B. A. WAKE, R.N .- The Court-Martial to take place on heard H.M.'s ship Ocean, of Sheerness, to try Lieut. Baldwin A. Wake, late of H.M.'s sloop Proof, for insuberdination and other charges, on Friday, the 5th day of July, the court assembled at nine o'clock, consisting of the following membled at nine o'clock, consisting of the following membled at nine o'clock, constating of the following mem-bers: — Captain William Henry Sherriff, of Poictiers: bers: —Captain William Henry Sherriff, of Poictiers; Captain Peter Fisher, of Ocean; Commander George Grev Barton, Pointiers; and Commander H. Fleming, of Ocean. Admiral Sir John Chambers White, K.C.B., Port-Admiral at Sheerness, was the Pretident; George Essell, Eaq., officiated as Deputy Judge-Advocate, Lieut. Wake was professionally assisted by George Acceptach, Kq., solicitor, of Rochester. There were five therees expent the contemporary and the Commander of the Commander o charges against the prisoner, made by his Commanding Officer, Commander Richard Henry Stopford, all of which accused the prisoner of conducting himself in an unbreoming menner, and making use of improper ques-tions to Commander Stopford during the months of January, March, and May, whilst the sloop Pearl was between Monte Video and Rio de Janeiro, and at Bahia, when the Pearl was on its passage to England; and also for writing a letter to Commander Stopford, in which were expressions evincing an insubordinate spirit, and containing an untrus assertion. Several witnesses were examined at great length, and the Judge-Advocate having put in several letters written by the prisoner to Captain Stouford, all of which were most respect. fully worded, when the prisoner called upon the prosecutor to produce the letter he wrote on the prosecutor to produce the letter ha wrote on the 4th of March, and which he (the prisoner) returned to the prosecutor for an explanation, which seemed to take the prosecutor by surprise. The prisoner, in his lengthened defence, expressed regret at the circumstances rendering it necessary for the assembling of the Court, and that his desire had been always to monduct himself as became an Officer and a gentleman; and that it was most unfortunate for him that any misunderstanding should have arisen between himself and his Officer under whom he was in command. With regard to the latters comne was in command. With agard to the actors com-plained of, he trusted the Court would see that they were couched in language respectful, and dictated by a respect-ful feeling, such as a Junior Officer is justified in writing to his superior. In commenting on the evidence, he would not this up the time of the Court, as the whole of the statements riven in evidence of the several witnesses. proves that he was not gailty of any wilful deschedience to Commander Stepford's orders. He has been seven-teen years in the service of the Royal Navy, five of which was in the West Indies, and the rest at the Cape of Good liune and South America. The prisoner then produced everal testimonials of good character from several British Officers, all of which spoke highly of the character of the prisoner. The case being closed, the Court was cleared. and on the re-admission of strangers the Judge read the minding of the Courts.—Gree, second, third, and fourth charge, with so week of the blu charge, "for that the and Lioutenant B. A. Wake, on or about the 24th of May, 1844, was absent from deck during his watch, excepting for a short period, and conducted himself in a disrespectful manner towards Commander Stopford, when questioned by him on the subject," ere not proved. Regarding the latter part of the fifth charge, writing a letter of an insubordinate spirit, containing an untrue assertion, is proved; for which the Court reprimends him. The list. It is evident that I to equip a fleet of 20 sail of the line for sea, when the whole Navy scarcely possesses as many sound ships, would require extraordinary efforts, and would leave the country wholly without a reserve or a resource in case of a great Marai defeat. If any one at all acqueinted with the state of our dockyards will compare this list even with the line-of-lattle ships built in this country within the last 10 or 15 years, he will be retiefed that nothing is more ladderens then to attempt tatisfied that nothing is more ludicrous than to attempt to clarm the country by comparisons with the firsts of foreign Powers; though we are perfectly well aware that the Russian first is probably equal to the French in disthe Russian first is properly equal to the reserving manifestally superior to it in numbers, Foreign Powers are, doubtiess, accurately informed of those facts, and the Prince deficientials in not ignorant of them; and the better they are known, the more improbable will war become. With an establishment of 30 advance-ships ready for sea at a shurt notice, we have nothing to apprehend from a surprise, for their existence is as well known and almost as much felt in the political world, as if they were all in Matta barbour.

World, as if they were an in manus parsons.

It is needless, therefore, for the members and organs of the Opposition to affect alors as to the security of our court, or the proper assurdancy of our fing in foreign ame; but we must confers that we are no reason to justify the extreme reductions intely quadred in the more active branch of the Service. It is extremely improbable that wanter of the Service. At its expensely impropants that any year should elapse in the present state of the world in which some occurrence or another may not call for the presence of a considerable Neval force; and we are per-nueded that the public service lases far more than is dended that the public service loses for more than is gaine in accreasy by the nearestity of equipping a fleet with extraordinary basts, and by extraordinary mores. It file manufact of ships of the line in economical is not highly as a new manufact to allow a squeetres to be even to Gibralter with odity eachinging for that proposes flag-ships, and ships planely decised for other important services, the economy will agree with up in the epipien that each a state of things consist continue.— Philips.

The law of 1937 fixed the public establishment of the Prench stery at 40 thips of the Min and 30 frigates; one half of this member, both vessels and frigates, to be after, m

What was the fact in 1840, according to efficial statements? There were then 11 men-struct affects 14 armed, 4 in digmentialitis, fand 3 disarmed. There were on the stocks 23, only 18 of which was advanced 22 parts out of 34 to completion. There were 34 frigates affect, and 10 mireneed in 32 parts out of 24 to completion. to completion.

Of the 21 men-of-war effect in 1640, three have been condemned, whilst two here been hunched, jeaving a fleet of 20 sail, which, by the new regulations and fleeticotion, could all be ready in a month.

Besides the Priedland and the Comannes, launched in 1840, there were in that year 23 more energy-war ad-1840, there were in that year 23 more mean-of-war advanced nearly to manifestum, viz, .....The Fills do Parle, Louis XIV., Valeny, of 120 guns; the Firmous, Toyo., Navaria, Henry IV., Rylan, Austroliu, Anaibid, Duguny Trania, Ulm, Turonne, H'ayram, at 190 guns; the Tilisis, Bresian, Rayard, Donamerth, Dugunselle, Fontonoy, Hestor, Septere, Castiplious, of 90 guns.

ROBATAN NAVY.....There is nearcally a man in Righted who has travelled, or a man, we man or shill within parent who has travelled, or a men, weamn, or child within sound of Bow bells, who has read, who does not know that the maritime power of Mussic is utlarly contempsible, and not or now sells, who are read, who does not know put and not maritime power of Riussia is utterly contemptible, and not for an instant to be compared with the Navy of France. It is not twenty years ago, since even so westeled a navy as the Turkish passessed the power of shuffing up the Ressian perpetually in the Black Sea; but though this paper of the Turk was decreased by the battle of Neverthe, yet, despite every facility afforded by peace, and the strong impulsion of the Government, the Russian Navy, bus, within the last fifteen years, made small progress. The ships built in the Black Sea are specific decreased by the dry-roj, and such in the effect of the climate, that the beams of timber in the Dockyards at Micolast, employed in supporting the ships, are half-sonsamed by it. Though the timber is obtained at a trifling cost, and the pessessia who hav it are all serfs of the Grown, yet, from mismanagement and the corruption of functionaries, the building of ships costs quite as much is Russia as in England, while the backs of a vast number are broken in all the Dockyards, from sheer ignorance in the leanching of them.

The principal harhour and arranal of Muscle, in the Baltio, is situated at the castern extramity of the Guif of Finland, which, for six mostles in the year, is from les and tempost whelly munavigable. Even in 1838, not-withstanding the advantages resulting from the acquisi-tion of Finland, out of 290,314 tons of Russian mer-chardine imported into England, 271,035 was in Seitish shipping: a plain proof that her commercial Navy is still more ineigniferant than her Milliary Marine. There are be no doubt that the possession of Finland has given to Russia a long line of coast inhabited by intropid Mariners, and that she has added to her empire the docks and hurbours of Helsingfors, Ekanes, Abo, Bior-nelorg, Nystad, Christinatad, Ac.; yet the possession of those raw materials (if we may so speak) have no yet and tempest wholly unnavigable. Even in 1828, notof these raw materials (if we may so speak) hi of these raw materials (if we may so speak) have no yet been turned to little proficule second; in the construction of a powerful Navy; and he must be a silly sellor, and a still service statesman, who small for a moment think of comparing the Navies of Russia and France. The whole system of the Navy in Russia is uncound and rotten. The 15,000 satisfact Cronated are trained not suly as satisfact but as addition, and the Rich to the maderic and at Cronstact are trained not only as assiste but as saidlers; and the State, in thus endparouring to make them purfers two incompatible nervines, particulty manageds is making them the very servicet of saiders, and but laddferent soldiers. Though the Emperor plays at ships as well as at soldiers, yet the expenditure on the two services is widely different. In the year 1830 the marine of Rancia cost 20 millions of routies, while the Army had allotted to it too less a num than 150 millions; and the relative discrepantics in till greater in 1844 in forces. had allotted to it no less a sum than 130 millions; and the relative disproportion is vill greater in 1844 in fevour of the Army. The best Admirals in the Reaster Service are all foreigners. Oreig. Esphineterse, Hamilton, and Cronn are Reglishmen, and two sets of the four were simple Captains of Demonstin sulliers; Hegden is a Duishmen, and Luzarell and Kraubusters, the only opposite Officers in the Russian Navy, were brought up in the English Service. Every one of those Admirals now now old and worn out; and it as Regal was were to break out to tenerous, we believe their average of these Officers in new old said worn out; and if a Manul war were to break out to morrow, we believe there are not then. Colleges in the Resolan Service expedie of managing a large fact at seas, much less of bringing one into action. Is it not, then, preparateous felly to doughers the Resolan Navy to the French—to the French, passenting sepable young Officers, who have risen inferte the upo of 45 to the rank of Rest-Admirals, and who happer and thirst Ing an opportunity of distinguishing themselves?

The Resolan feet has nothing suitonally characteristic, but is formed after the English and Dutch models; and the great hedy of the Resolan passile may be seed to have a positive aversion to the ups agreeing. And even the marking population of that wait ampire are more land-lubbers, compared with the Swedes, Danes, and Nor-

The Russian fleet has nothing but its yearly manosuves in the Baltie, an inland see, without tides, or, when navigable, without dark nights, or in the Black Sea, fully as unfavourable to the production of a perfect seaman while all the seas of the world are open to the French not feed up, like the Russians, in their own barbours for eight months out of the twelve.— Morning Chroniele, other regts. unjustly. I sliude to the letter in your last Paper signed "Subscriber," who, I must presume (from its tenor), belongs to the 5th Dragoon Guards, or is at least connected with it. Now, I am not going to advocate the cause of the Scote Greys, which, being a Scotch regt., has certainly a strong staim to Scotland, whenever the public Service will admit of their going there. The Greys, however, can light their own battles, no doubt. The 5th Dragoon Guilffe are, I know, a galinat and most excellent regt., and well switted to any indulgence they may meet with; but at present they cannot put their claims to choice quarters in competition with the 11th Hussars, as you, Sir, I am sure, will agree with me, for how really stands the case with the regt. as to me, for how really stands the case with this regt. as to quarters? After a service in the Peninsula of several years, the 11th Lt. Dragoons returned from Waterloo, and the three years' duty with the Army olfOccupation in France, only two months previous to their embarkation for India; indeed, the regt. had not even three months' for India; indeed, the regt. had not even unree months motion of this movement to the Tropics. And on arriving again in England, after nearly 20 years' service in India, they remained two years at Cantarbury—quite as much because the 12th Lanoure rumained the same time at Brighton, as to favour the 12th Hunars, which latter regt. remained at Brighton tan months—thence to Homselow for a year—and then weminally to York for a year; now lot a year—and then seminately to hark for a year; I say nominally, because Headq. and due troop only were stationed at York the whole period. The other 5 troops being questered in Sheffield, Burnley, Sarneley, Haifins, and Rechdule; and most of the Officers and men hever quitted the manufacturing districts at all, or saw York. It is true the regt. has been about 15 months in Dubli now, but not even ten months in the same barracke during that period. Why then is this regt. (the lith flusars), to be so continuelly attacked? Surely it cannot be from envy of its "crimson overalls!" Your insertion of this will greatly oblige, yours, most faithfully, July 10. W. D. B.

INPANTRY.

Household Infantry,-On Monday last there was a grand field-day in the large space of ground generally used for such purposes in Hyde-park. The troops on the ground consisted of the lat and 2d battalions of the Coldground counter or the lake and 20 bettendes of that distin-sureum Geards, making the full strength of that distin-guished corps about 980 men; the 2d and 3d battalians of the Grenadier Guards, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Grant—the lat battalion of this regiment is now at Windhester. Including the bands of both, there were about 1500 present, and all were under the command of Lieut.-Cel. Walton, Coldstream Guards. The Duke of Cambridge, Celonel of the Coldstreams, arrived on the ground at the appointed time. His Royal Highness was mounted on a gray charger, and was attired in the regi-mentals of the corps, but in undress, vis., bine freck coat, with sash, sword, do. At about a quarter past 8 o'clock the several buttalions assembled—the first of the Coldstream coming from Portman-st. Barracks, and the second from the Weilington Barracks, St. James's Park. 2d batt, of the Granedier Guards came from St. George's Barracks, and the 3d from St. John's Wood. To the Editor of the Nanal and Military Gazette.

Sin,—The Monthly Army List for July, 1844, gives a list of the "battles, &u., for which honorary distinctions have been granted, and the regts. present." In that list I find but one regt. (the 5th Fusiliers) stated to have been present at Wilhelmstahl, on July 24, 1763, whereas it is well known that the 24th Foot was also present, and that the late General Thomas Scott (who died within the last three years) carried one of the colours of the 24th on that three years) carried one of the colours of the 24th on that day. As the 5th and 24th are now quartered together in Dublin, a reference to the records of the former corps would establish the truth of my statement. I should add that the Editor of the Monthly Army List could not etate that the 24th Regt. had been present at Wilhelmstahl, until he should have received official intimation of the fast from the War-Office, so that he is in no way to blame for the omission.

34th-Capt. J. H. Mathaws has been charged with an assault upon a carman, in having, so the 8th inet., at Portobelio barracks, Dublia, torn a Repeal button from the man's coust, and turned him out of the barrack.— Freeman's Journal.

The mesa-room of the Serjeants was very beautifully decorated on the occasion, with blue and gold draperies, evergreens, stars of bayonets, transparencies, &c.; and when filled with its fair and gallant groups formed as gay and interesting a sight as I have ever I think witnessed. In walts, quadrille, and country-dance the happy hours flew by; and a supper was provided which did the greatest credit to the d teste and bospitality of the entertainers. After the u-ual and appropriate toasts were duly given and re-aponded to, the following song, written for the occasion, was sung with long and loud appleuse:—

To the Editor of the Navel and Military Secrete,

Sta___I would fain ask of One of last Wor and also of Obus, not in anger, but in secrow, why they should feel so sors, because the Royal Mariasa complein of not being allowed the full-pay retirement of four Livet. Cols., being allowed the full-pay retirement of fear Livet-Coin, and four Captains annually, as is the case in the RL Artillery? It is now acknowledged by everyhody, that the "Commission" treated the Merines with more than injustine; and in proof of this, I need only refer to the pitter avvarabled and unansworable designants which have of late appears that the Artillery, with application the serving-list mone than the Marines, have represented the Artillery are allowed to place on that Tanked Officers on the Serving-list mone than the Marines are not allowed to place on. Now analy, with years four Field Officers and Sour Captains; whereas, the Marines are not allowed source one. Now analy, with peak feats before their eyen, the Marines have an undeathful hight to say, that us buth dorpo rise by seniority, they eaght to be pleased upon an aqual flating. The Marinea are only esting for what they are no justly estified to; they seek not to detroif from others, and I hope that after this explemention, neither Cher of leaf Flarmar Cher will "rum a muck at tilt with them," but take everything in good followship. The observation in "M. E.'s" letter, as to the corps of Migitime heleg a hody without a head, doubtless meant that they had no one to look up to fer support—no one who had their run into-mote which the gellant corps has so long angerienced, not only from FfAirs, but also from Forice, it must be acknowledged that the remark is not at alifemaphicable.

The lapt Colonel Bir Richard Williams, in his uncellant "statement" to the "Connelssion," stroigly recessed at the Board of Admirally, whenever markers relating to the Marines were discussed, and viewing things past and present, there can be but one upinion on the subject; which is, that until some influential person, not delegate to the strong in a some resuments, the two sidereds—Coup. It was now influent; to expect the Board, it will only not in disappointment; to expect the Board, it will only and in disappointment; to expect the Board, it will only and in disappointment; to expect the Board, it will only and in disappointment; to expect the schooling a hould hold the appointment; it was given to the Lieutenant-Colonels, as some resumeration for the tardiness of promotion; yet, in contravention of this wholesous regulation, a Commandent and the Dee, Adjutant-General tenant-Colonals, as some remuneration for the terminess of promotion; yet, in contravention of this wholesome regulation, a Commundant and the Dep. Adjutant-General are still holding the appointments.

At no period in the history of the Marine verpe, was there ever known to be such a want of promotion in this erm of the Service, as at the present Mass! for—wine would believe it !—there are Officers of clery years of age, which was historian in runk than Captains, with no apples. erm of the Service, as at the present Musa? for—who would balleve it?—there are Officers of exp years of each who are no higher in runk then Captains, with no subject chance of preferment but what follows from death integrates. It cannot be expected of an Officer, after integration one-and-forty years, to take the half-pay of a Captainstone-circ. It cannot be expected of an Officer, after integration would suppose that it is considered sneagh by Main West at home at each or a more liberal system—think he adopted. It is true that an Officer of Marines, on arriving at the rank of Field Officer, selden goes abread; that that is not his fault; he is ready and analous to be employed; he does not wish to remain idle. Why not, then, employ him, it will be asked? For this simple reason—Beanuse, by the time he arrives at that rank, he is, from eld age and bodily infirmities, quits incapable of active service. There are about FIFTY CAPTAINS new serving, who were BURALTHEN from ciphicand-twenty in mine-studiesmity years; and, what is still worse, still more gailing to the festings, the junior of this number stands sevenly-right from the top of the list. How long he may be in arriving at the next step I will not presume to besserd an opinion. Semething must be done for the corps; old Officers cannot be fegging on year after year as Captains; and its seven years have elepsed since there was an "Order in Council" authorising a retirement of Field Officers and Captains, it is to be boned that the sense day which the vecancies for Coma retirement of Field Officers and Captains, it is to be hoped that the same day which the vacancies for Comu for Commandants and second Commandants are filed up, an extemetre full-pay retirement will also be given to the Captains—the greatest sufferers of all—because san-half

If it should be saked—What the Marines wish for?
It may be answered—Promotion for the War-Officers; it may be answered—Promotion for the War-Officers; Assimilation to the Ordneuca Corps, as to the proportionate number of Field Officers; the retirement of four Field Officers and four Captains annually, as is the case in the Artillery; and, in order to render the Corps efficient, an outlet, by the sale of commissions, and a retirement, upon a liberal scale,—I have, &c., M. With regard to sending a Rifle regiment, it appears to be perfect madees and folly. How can that particular service be performed properly in such a climate; why, one ordinary day's drill in skirmishing order would kill bundreds; to say nothing of when called into active service. Then, again, look at their dark, may black diems, attracting the power and influence of the sun to the greatest possible degree; and if they change the tiousers to white, of which there is a talk, they would then be just as conspicuous as any other regiment, and the object and nature of that particular service quite de-frated. Ritles should never be sent to India, becoming there worse then useless. Causda, Mediterranean, and a l'emissier Campaign, are the countries whete such a service is invaluable. My opinious on the Lance, and other matters relating to the British Cavalry, have not been hastly farmed 2 nor the foundation as in to be nicked are they founded on such information as is to be ple up in barracks and drill-grounds in the United Kings or in witnessing a grand review or two in Germany, but in far more instructive fields. And on to the approhensions entertained by your correspondent, that the "national Military self-loss of those who object to the Lance would be affected were they to confoun their resi Lance would be affected were they to conform their opinions." I shall briefly remark it is within the lice of possibility that he measures other men's corn by his bushel.

His question, as to "what is the real reason why the lence is less a weapon for the British Light Dragoon than for the Light Dragoon, or Ublan of Austria, Francis, and for the Light Dragoon, or Uhian of Au Reasis," may be measured thus, and I have frequently done so before:—The paudity of our mounted acidiers renders it desirable that every regiment should be equally able to perform all the important duties of the out-poets and to engage likewise any mounted force in Europe at w querters,

They who fancy Lancers suited for the out-poets, or that they can have the least chance in performing those duties if opposed to Cavalry armed with carbiase, cannot have considered the question attentively; or, if they have done so, the conclusion they have come to has been

My suggestions on the arms, &c. of the British Cavelry have been long before the public, and it is therefore quite unnecessary that I should recapitulate them. I beg, however, to observe—and in doing so, hope to be acquitted of egotism and ranity—that however uniqued and vague my reasonings may appear in the eyes of your correspondent, and ardent admirer of the Lance and its fluttering rnnon, all military men do not agree with him; as th following extracts, from a letter which appeared last year in the Acrel and Military Gazette, fully prove :"I speak the opinion of many Cavelry Officers of experience and judgment, when I say that Colonal Leach has, in the following paragraph, pet forth the most accorate notice of what aught to be the arganization of the British Cavalry, in contradistinction to its presupplied defect, viz,— For a Cavalry force so amaly our own, where it is so designed that all should be as Light Cavalry, thoroughly convergent with the of the advanced posts, and equally competent to gage any Cavelry in the world at sleep quarta, and in compact bodies, I shall be parloned for designing the policy of aping our continental aciglabours by keeping up separate ourse of Cairassieve, Lancors, Hussars, Chaeseurs, Dragodes, &c., and by the display of relieving so great a variety of handsome uniforms. Again, this and judgment, when I say that Colonal Leach so great a variety of handsome uniforms." Again, this Officer seys:—"I have written more than I intended wishing only through you. Sir, to assure Column Leach that his views of Cavalry are coincident with those of many practical soldiers at this moment serving in that particular branch of Mar Majesty's Army. His saparience, his intelligence, and the absence of all prejudice in propounding his opinious, will, I hope and believe, give them weight in those quarters where theories may be reared to practice." I shell put follow " R, G, P." through his dissertation

Naval & Æillitary Gazette.

" Duning the past week attention has been frequently called, in and out of Parliament, to the insufficient Naval force kept affect. We are not about to dispute this matter, but we must say that Englanding a vact fleet, which could be seen efficient; and their the we the less feer any evil from the pagelty of vessels in commission. In the event of a wer was MAYK. We, however, think it An pose days of steam, quits as essential to the safety of the United Kingdom, that we should pessent a ARMY to resist an enemy on our shores, as to have Navy to guard our houses. Let us survey oursorily our long and exposed sea-line-what have we on it to resist a landing in sufficient force to destroy our towns, may, even our arsenals! We have a more kandful of men belonging to the Regular Army at home; India and the Colonies, and Foreign garrisons, absorb the main part of the Army and, with the exception of the Pon Youman Cavalry, England is literally left to be defended with a force scarcely sufficient for the count immediately opposite France. It may be said about the Militia is to the regular Army what the ships in divasor and is ordimary are to the Commissioned Navy. This ought to be the case, but the case is not so. There is not at present, we believe, a single regiment of Militia eve balloted, much less embodied and trained. This

It may not by some be considered expidient to belief the whele Militia of the United Kingdom. But in this opinion we cennot agree. We would say ballot for the full force; but, for the present, only embody, arm, and train the Militia of the Maritime Countles of England. By so doing the Regular Army could be made available for Isuland and Scotland, in the evalt of a sudden war, and the rest of the Milith tring ballond, could soon be rendered effective. We have long looked with anxiety for some state measure, and any our position for defence; and since John Bull is will jestous of adding to the Standing Army, let him have what he has always most fairly considered a Constitutional Anny-the Militia-for the defence of his home and hearth. We frankly tell him that at present they are without any state defe Steam has destroyed our inviolebility as an island, and it is not when a hostile force has been landed on the abores of Old England, and his reveged our towns and humlets, that we are to set about balloting, arming, and training our gallant Militia. FOREIGH SERVICE, AND SELLER OF REGIMENTS.

To the Letter by Photosted and Muttery Guarite.

Bin,—You may repelled that when some time ago it a was stated in your super that two or three regiments would leave this country in the course of the present year, to relieve others in liddle, that this information was contradicted in another Atintary Journal. We had no doubt of the justice of the comple frequently made, touching the inconveniences and dis-society, to the extent of the endangerment of health, to which soldiers were constantly exposed when embarked on board hired or chartered steam-vessels, is coasting voyages, and in passing and repeating between England, Ireland, and Scotland. We have been amongst those who stronuously advecated the employment of Government riels, or suitable troop-thips, for the conveyance of the Military, upon all practicable escacione; but in so doing, we were, as we supposed, forwarding the interests of the soldier as well as of the public, striving to work out an improvement, and not the more transfer of a had evaters and imperfect arrangement from a private vessel to a public one. From communications which have reached us, we are impressed with the belief that something yet remains to be done to perfect the system of removing depote and regiments by sea, especially in short voyages of from one to three or four days' duration. During the past and present year Government steam-vessels have been more frequently employed than heretofore. One advantage is, or ought to be, secured to the soldier by the employment of these Stoumers, namely, that one system of arrangements should prepail for the emberkation, distribution on board, and disamberkation of the troops: honce, in a short time, each depot or detachment on embarking would know precisely the routine of giving in arms and ammunition, stowing away accontraments, and being told off to me errangements indispensable for order and comfort, but which, when imperfectly understood, are tedioss, and to the soldier, hungry and tired at the end of a merch, may seem barassing and vexations. Sailors regard soldiers with but little geod-will, especially on board ship, and are not always disposed to promote their comfort or to render them assistance, whilst the position of a soldier on ship-board is at all times so replete with the miseries of growded space, best and foul smalls between docks, bad fage and see-clokness, that he is by no means auxious th long his sejourn in such disegreeable quarters. It is, therefore, no less a measure of policy than of humanity to curtail as fer an pessible a period during which the utility of troops is lost and their efficiency impaired.

A Government ressed destined for the gonveyance of troops, and appropriated either permanently or temporarily for that service, should afford more space and comfort in her fittings than a private vessel taken up at the moment by contract, and such a vessel might rescousbly be expected to make an equally quick, if not a more speedy passage under similar circumstances. These sonditions are by no means invariably fulfilled. We have recently heard of a Government atsamer employed in conveying troops, that eccupied twenty-two hours in performing the passage between Liverpool and Kingstown, in smooth water, and with convers set a considerable portion of the time. The mail packets, as is well known, perform the same voyage in 10 hours; and although it may be marcely fair to expect a vessel laden with troops and baggage to keep pass with the mail, yet the difference is disproportionately great, and it would be easy to quote instances of contract vessels laden with troops, rausing from Liverpool to Dublin in fourteen hours, and discharging their burthen within twenty instead of forty hours. There is another point connected with this subject to which our attention has been drawn-the diffiettendagt upon meeting Officers on these short veyeges. By the Passage Warriest of 19th Oct., 1842, and the late jevicien er Addinate, dated 6th May, 1944, provision is made for the meeting of Officers in Guma's ships, or in vessels bired or obsetered by the public, the rate of al. legance is presented, and in some once the option is granted to Officers of providing their own moss. Even in contrast appears the Master is bound to ferrick a table on payments of the prescribed contribution; but in a Govern meet Mines runel surployed on this service, no such condition exists, and Officers are therefore sequired to meet themselves. For vegaging of a month or though he decession, this last method may be convenient, but the ordered disputable

In this case the Marie devolves upon the milimit of the Francis Warrant, who have neglected, as it became to us, to make it applicable to or the Francis Warrant, wi the particular case in quarties. The efficient is out productive of much inconveniency and we parent to case it is one that is manifestly easy to recitly or remove altogether, by rendering it imporative on the Commander of stuly vessels to provide a table for the Milltary Officers during their brief sojoung, adopting at the same time, such arrangements with the Commay easile him to do so without inconvenionate mining a switchie scale of rediscration. by the Officers, for their menting whilst on Board.

FRANCE AND MOROCCO .- The Toulonnois observ A Member of the British Commons inquired of the Minister explanations of the misunderstanding between France and Moracco, and as regards the departure of the division under the Prince de Joinville, &c. The head of the Cabinet replied that the French Government had afforded the fallest assurances of a desire for peace, and had even assumunicated to him the instructions delivered to the Prime. We must observe, by the way, that these tions were prepared before the news was rece in Paris of the battle of the 18th, which has completely changed the face of things, and fresh instructions must have been farwarded to the Royal Admiral. We have announced the arrival at Constantia of Gen. Delarue, who, it had been said, was to serve under the Duke who, it has been said, was to serve under the Dike D'Asmale. It is now asserted that the Prince has obtained three months' leave of absence, which he will spend in France, and that General Delarue is to replace him provisionally in the government of the province. There is every reason to believe that should the Duke d'Aumale ever return to Algeria, it will be to reassume the command which he holds at present.

niater of War, giving the details of his late operations on the frontiers of Morocco, it is evident that the war is one carried on against the French, not by the Emperor of Morocco, but by the independent tribes on the frontier. El-Guennaoni declares, is his letter to Marshal Bagonud, that "he has received so permission to make war." The Marshal himself admits that he is very certain that the Emperor of Morocco has given no pecuniary assistance to Abd-el-Keder, and that, in fact, the Emperor has no great love for the Arab Chief, in whom he has no confidence. Still Marshal Bugeaud assumes that the attacks are by the orders of the Emperor; but he thinks that the shocks given by the battles of the 30th May and 15th June may induce his Majesty to renounce his timidlyconceived projects, and he expresses an opinion that "the energy and moderation of the whole of our (the French) conduct will allow diplomacy to arrange the affair." The Marshal, while waiting the result, occupies himself with putting down the tribes on the frontiers, and he admits some fears as to the truth of a reported resula by Abd-ei-Kader on the French territory in Algiers.

The Court of Directors have ordered that the Officiars of H.M.'s Service should hold two Division and two Brigade commands in this Presidency, and that for the latter, the Seniors as a matter of right should succeed; it, however, appears that there is one Brigade hold by a Queen's Officer in excess of the Resolution, and Gen. General Riddell, though his services may not have been the most brif-liant, is yet a most efficient and respectable Officer, and had served with his regiment longer than many can beaut of—a large portion of which time in the field. It would be well if the Press would adopt means to be-found that no such thing was the case—or was likely to be. — Bladras Emminer, May 9.

In our issue on Thursday we casually noticed the removal of General Leslie from Trichinopoly to Hellary; we shall now make a few remarks on the injustice which this order inflicts on the Officers of the Hon. Company's Service. On a former occasion we alluded to the Court's order directing only two Belgades in the Madras Presidency to be held by Officers in the Royal Army, and that those two appointments were, as a matter of right, held by Generals Allan and Bewall, and we then indulged a hope that Lord Twesdeals would at once remove this most just gaung of completest of the Company's Officers.

The order above referred to we know is most religiously observed in Bengal, and on a recent occasion of the death of a Company's Officer, in command of a division, and a Queen's Officer, as next senior Officer assuming command, a strong remonstrance was made against it, and an Officer of the Company's Service was ordered temporarily to take the command. How different at Madrae! Here there are the two samers in command of and. How different Brigades, and General Lealie a third, in edition to Colonel Jones, communding Fort St. George, and Colonel McBean, commanding Moulmein. Hence, then, they have five commands in Madeus instead of two. It is true that Fort Sr. George and Moulmein are held by whoever may be the Senjor at the Station, yet there are now seven Lieutenant-Colonsis commanding regiments, who are senior to Colonel McBean, and none under 32 years' service. We have heard that Lord Elphinstone, when told that General Leslie's appointment was contrary to the orders of the Court, blushed for his job, and said that he would take an opportunity of upsetting it when the division became vacant, as it has now done.

We hoped for better things from Lord Tweeddale, and particularly, as we had beard that he had expressed his continuous were publicly among the continuous series.

his opinion very plainly respecting the appointment of General Lealie to a Brigade Command by his prede-cessor, and we did flatter ourselves that when he had on opportunity of undoing the injustice without any an opportunity of inducing the injusting without any marked severity, that he would have done so. There was a raport, indeed, that such had been the case, and that Colonel Docaton was appointed to Bellary, and Wilson to Jaulius, but we fear the benefit influence which for ever thwarts his Lordship's good intentions,

Of course we should think that every Lieuzenant Colonel in the Company's Madran Army, would imme-diately memorialise the Court against this flagment invasion of their just rights, more especially as it is in direct contravention of the Court's orders. - Madray Examiner, May 20.

COURT-MARTIAL-LIEUT. B. A. WARE, R.N.-The Count-Mantial.—Lieuv. B. A. Ware, R.N.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty having ordered a Court-Martial to take place on board H.M.'s ship Ocean, at Sherness, to try Lieut. Baldwin A. Wake, late of H.M.'s shoop Pearl, for insubordination and other charges, on Friday, the 5th day of July, the court assembled at pine o'clock, comissing of the following members:—Captain William Henry Sherriff, of Poletiers; Captain Peter Fisher, of Ocean; Commander George Grev Burton. Pointiers; and Commander H. Fleming. Captain Peter Fisher, of Ocean; Commander George Grey Burton, Paintier; and Commander H. Fisming, of Ocean. Admiral Sir John Chembers White, K.C.B., Port-Admiral at Shermose, was the Franklant; George Esseli, Esq., officiated as Deputy Judge-Advocate. Lisut. Wake was professionally ensisted by George Accepts, Esq., solicitor, of Rachester. There were five charges against the prignance made by his Commandian charges against the prisoner, made by his Commanding Officer, Commander Richard Henry Stopford, all of which accoused the prisoner of conducting htmsetf in an unbecoming manner, and making use of improper questions to Commander Stopford during the months of nuary, March, and May, whilst the sloop Fearl was be-tween Monte Video and Rio de Janeiro, and at Babia, when the Pearl was on its passage to England; and also for writing a latter to Commander Stopford; in which were expressions evincing an inaubordinate spirit, and containing an untrue assertion. Several witnesses were examined at great length, and the Judge-Advocate baving put in several letters written by the prisoner to Captain Stopford, all of which were most respectfully worded, when the prisoner called upon the prosecutor to produce the letter he wrote on the 4th of March, and which he (the prisoner) returned to the prosecutor for an explanation, which seemed to take the prosecutor by surprise. The prisoner, in his lengthened defence, expressed regret at the circumstances rendering it necessary for the assembling of the Court, and that his desire had been always to conduct himself a became an Officer and a gentleman; and that it was most unfortunate for him that any misunderstanding should have arisen between himself and his Officer under whom he was in command. With regard to the letters com-plained of, he trusted the Court would see that they were couched in language respectful, and dictated by a respectful feeling, such as a Junior Officer is justified to his superfor. In commenting on the evidence, be would not take up the time of the Court, as the whole of the statements given in evidence of the several witnesses proves that he was not guilty of any wilful disobedience to Commander Stepford's orders. He has been seventeen years in the service of the Royal Navy, five of was in the West Indies, and the rest at the Cape of Good Hope and South America. The prisoner then produced several testimonials of good character from several British Officers, all of which apole highly of the character of the prisoner. The case being closed, the Court was cleared, prisoner. The case oning cuoses, too Court was control, and on the re-admission of strangers the Judge read the finding of the Court :... first, second, third, and fourth charge, with se much of the 5th charge, " for that the said Lieutenant B. A. Wake, on or about the 24th of May, 1844, was absent from deck during his watch, excepting for a short pariod, and conducted himself in a disrespect. towards Commander Stopford, when tioned by him on the subject," are not proved. Regarding the latter part of the fifth charge, writing a letter of an insubordinate spirit, containing an untrue suscetton, an insubordinate spirit, containing an untrue assertion, is proved; for which the Court reprimends him. The Court thus broke up.

It is evident that I to equip a fleet of 26 call of the line for sea, when the whole Navy scarcely possesses as many sound ships, would require extraordinary second and a second ships. and would leave the country wholly without a ri a resource in ones of a great Neral defeat. If any one at all acquainted with the stare of our dockyards will compare this list even with the line-of-battle ships bulls in this country within the last 10 or 15 years, he will be satisfied that nothing is more indicrous than to attempt to alarm the sountry by comparisons with the fleets of foreign Powers ; though we are perfectly well hware that the Russian float is probably equal to the Franch in discipline, and is considerably superior to it in numbers. Foreign Powers are, doubtless, accurately totormed of these facts, and the Prince def Joinville is not ignificant of Foreign Powers are, doubtleen, accurately informed of these facts, and the Prince deficientille is not ignificant of them; and the botter they are known; the more improbable will war become. With an 'establishment of 30 advance-ships ready for sea at a short notice, we have nothing to apprehend from a surprise, for their existence is as well known and almost as much felt in the political world, as if they were all in Malta between and organs of the Opposition to affect slates so it the seasority of our seast, or the proper ascendarcy of our flag in foreign seas; but we must confess that we not so remain to justify the extresse refereign. It is accreasely deposition that any year should elepse in the present at the more active branch of the Service. It is extressely langualishe that any year should elepse in the present state of the world in which come extrements or unother may not stall for the presence of a considerable Nexts force; and we are persuaded that the public service loose for those them in gatus in assument by the acceptance for equipping a feet with extraordibally hants, and by attraordinary organs. The principal harbour and arronal of Russia, in the Builds, is situated at the eastern extramity of the Guil of Finland, which, for six months in the year, is from ion and tempert wholly unnavigable. Even in 1678, non-Bultic, is situated at the entern extramesty or the arms or Fisiend, which, for all months in the year, is from ion and temport wholly unnavigable. Even in 1878, non-withstending the advantages receiting from the acquisition of Finand, out of $10,314 tone of Receion merohandiss imported into Rugiand, 271,035 was in British shipping; a plain proof that her commercial Navy is still more insignificant than her Britistry Marine. There can be no doubt that the possession of Finland has given to Russia a long line of count inhabited by intropid Mariners, and that she has added to her emptin the docks and harbours of Heisingfors, Ekenas, Abo, Blowneberg, Nystad, Christianstad, S.c.; yet the possession of these raw materials (if we may so speak) have an yes been turned to little profitable eccount in the construction of a powerful Navy; and be must be a silly sailor, and a still sorrier stateman, who could for a moment think, of compering the Navies of Russia and France. The whole system of the Navy in Russia is unseemed and rotten. The 1h,000 ecitoes at Cromstadt are trained not only as anifore but as soldiers; and the State, in these andercouring to Studie is unseened and rotten. The 15,000 editors at Cronstedt are tesimed not only as anisors but at soldiers; and the State, in these andercouring to make those perform two incompatible services, puriectly encoucied in making them the very services of callors, and but indifferent soldiers. Though the Emperor slays at shipe as well as at soldiers, yet the espenditure on the two services is widely different. In the year 1630 the marine of Ressia onet 20 millions of roubles, while the Army had allotted to it no less a sum than 140 millions; and the relative disprepending is still greater in 1644 in favious of the Army. The best Admirals is the Ressian Repeats are all foreigners. Gruig, Elphinstone, Hamilton, and Crons are Registrates of Newmastle colliers; Maydem in a Dutchmen, and Lacarell and Kressenstern, the pairy expubic Officers in the Russian Navy, were brought up in the Registrates out; and if a Naval war ware to break not to secret, we believe there are not three Officers in the Russian Review supulse of managing a large doct at one, each less of bringing one into action. In it, met, out to morrow, we believe there are not three Officers in the Ressian Review appable of managing a large float set see, much loss of bringing one into action. In it, not, then, prepareness folly to compere the Ressian bing to the Prench-to the Breach, possessing capable going Officers, who have rhose before the age of 45 to the stack of Ress-Admirata, and who hungar and thics for an apportunity of distinguishing themselves?

The Ressian float has nothing subjoachly spaceateristic, but is formed after the Regileh and Dutch module; and the great hedy of the Ressian years may be said to have a positive aversion to the use service. And even the maritime population of that vast empire are more ind-

The Bussian fleet has nothing but its yearly manusures The success sections of the section of a perfect season without tides, or, when nevigable, without dark nights, or in the Black Sea, felly as malevourable to the production of a perfect season; while all the seas of the world are open to the Franch, not ised up, like the Russians, in their own harbours for eight months out of the twelve.—Morning Chroniols.

Sin,—When a regt. feels angry at being treated unjustly as to its quarters, it should not, I think, attack other regts unjustly. I allude to the letter in your last Paper signed "Sakseriber." who, I must presume (from its tenor), belongs to the 5th Dragoon, Guards, or is at least connected with it. Now, I am not going to advocate the cause of the Scots Greys, which, being a Scotch regt., has certainly a strong claim to Scotland, whenever the public Service will admit of their going there. The Greys, however, can fight their own battles, no doubt. The 5th Dragoon Guards are, I know, a gallant and meat excellent rest, and well entitled to any induiand most excellent regt., and well entitled to any indulgener they may meet with ; but at present they expect put their claims to choice querters in competition with the their claims to capies queriers in competition with the lith Hussers, as you, Sir, I am sure, will agree with me, for how really shands the case with this regt. as es quarters? After a service in the Peninsula of several years, the lith La. Dregoons returned from Waterico, and the three years' duty with the Army off Competion in France, only two months previous to their embarkation for India; indeed, the regt. had not even three months' with the Army of the property of the for India; indeed, the regt. had not even three months' nutice of this movement to the Tropics. And on arriving again in Eugland, after nearly 20 years' service in India, they remained two years at Centerbury—quits as such because the 12th Lameers remained the quice time at Brighton, so to favour the 11th Hussars, which latter regt. remained at Brighton ten months—thence to Houselaw for a year—said their neminally to York for a year; I say nominally, because Headq, and one troop only were stationed at York the whote period. The other 5 troops being quartered in Shelleid, Burnby, Barnsley, Rullfax, and Rochdule; and most of the Officers and most never guitted the manufacturing districts at all, or saw York. It is true the regt, has been about 15 months in Dublin now, but not even ten months in the same barrucks now, but not even ten months in the same parracts during that period. Why then is this regt. (the 11th Hussars), to be so continually attacked? Berely it cannot be from easy of its "crimeen overalls!" Your insertion of this will greatly oblige, yours, most faithfully, July 10.

I should add would establish the train or my statement. I should add that the Editor of the Monthly Army List enuld not state that the 2ith Ragt, had been present at Witheliastahl, until he should have received official intimation of the fant from the War-Office, so that he is in no way to blame

Siz.—In perusing your last week's Gazette. I regret to find that amongst the deceased officers of the 44th Reg. enumerated on the tablet about to be creeted at Alverstoke Church, near Gosport, as a token to their memory, the name of Lieut. Cumberland is emitted; memory, the name of Lieut. Comberland is emitted; this is the more glaring, as he was really the Officer who tore down the Colour, and the circumstance is perticularly related by Capt. Seater, who got possession of the other Colour. Probably, through the medium of year Gazette, the name may yet be restored, as I believe he was greatly estimated by all the Officers in his Regiment, and he remained in action to the very last, where he was killed on the Jugdullack Hill, in company with Capt. Souter and a headful of men.

The sentence of the General Court-Martial held at Portsmouth on private kienry Cleg, for striking a Serjeant in the mouth when on parade, has been promulgited; the prisoner has been sentenced to an imprisonment of two

There being no further necessity for the services of the Royal Marines in South Wales, the detachments have been recalled to Pembroke, whenev some of them will be removed to divisional head-quarters, for which purpose the Dec steam transport is hourly aspected. The detachments from Haverfordwest, under Major Whyldch, and ments from Haverfordwest, under Major Whyldeh, and from Cardigan, under Capt. and four Captains ARRVALLY, its in the case in the RI. Artillary? It is now asknowledged by everybody, that the "Commission" treated the Marines with more than injustive; and in proof of this, I need only refer to the picks unvariabed and unenswerable itnessents which here at late appears that the Artillery, with some three thinking men less than the Marines, have were required for the Starting than the later cover field Offices on the Starting than the the then the Mariner, have view-court fault (Copys on the Serving-list mone than the latter copys position the Artitlery are allowed to place on their Redired-list avang wan four Field Otionra and four Captaine; whereas, the Marines are not allowed ones one. How surely, with such fasts before their eyes, the Marines have an un-doubted right to say, that as both corps rice by contentry, they ought to be plead upon an equal facting. The Marines are only asking for what they are no justly entitled to; they seek not to detrect from others, and I hope that after this explanation, neither One of lead Worster Obrz will "ran n-muck or silt with them," but take everything in good followahip. The observation in "M. E.'s" letter, as to the corps of Marines being a tody without a head, doubtless meant that they had no sun to lack un to for amonors—no one who had their real inte-without a head, doubtless meant that they had me am to lack up to for support—no one who had their real intersects at heart; and when we witness the ungunerous treatment which the gallant corps has so long experienced, not only from FFAirs, but also from Tories, it must be acknowledged that the remark is not at all inapplicable.

The late Colonel Bir Richard Williams, is his involved meaning to the "Statement" to the "Commission," arrangly requested that the head of the corps should always have a seaf at the Board of Admiralty, whoeseer matters reliable to the Marines were discussed, and viewing things paid and present, there can be but one opinion on the subject; which is, that until some influential person, not belonging to the worms, be placed in command, with a seat at the Board, it will only end in disappointment, to expect the adoption of any liberal measures. Take, for instance, the two Adderdo-Comp. It was asser intended that a Commandent aboutd hold the appointment: it was given to the Liebenant-Colonels, as some resumeration for the tardisces of promotion: yet, in contravention of this wholesome of promotion; yet, in contrevention of this wholseome regulation, a Commandant and the Dep. Adjutant-General are still holding the appointments. At no period in the history of the Marine corps, was there over known to be such a want of promotion in this arm of the Bervins, as at the present time? for—who would believe it?—there are Officers of cirty years of age, who are no higher in rank then Captains, with no other chance of preferment but what follows from death wearnoiss. It cannot be expected of an Officer, after serving one-and-forty years, to take the half-pay of a Captain—to eccept the pittance of seven shillings a day. Yet, one would suppose that it is considered staugh by those who sit at home at ease, or a more liberal system would be admind. It is true that an Officer of Merines, or a previous there over known to be such a want of promotion in this sit at home at case, or a more liberal system would be adopted. It is true that an Officer of Marines, on arriving at the rank of Field Officer, seldom goes abroad; but that is not his fault; he is ready and anarous to be employed; he does not wish to remain idle. Why not, then, employ him, it will be asked? For this simple reason—Because by the time he arrives at that rank, he is, from sid age and bodily infirmities, quite incapable of active hereign. There are about TISTY CAPTAINS now serving, who were Burnate-TRENS from eight-and-territy to nine-and-territy years; and, what is still worse, still more golling to the feelings, the funior of this number stands security-eight from the top of the list. How long he may be in arriving at the next step I will not presente to haserd an opinion. Something meat be done for the corps; old Officers cannot be fagging on year after year as Captains; and as seven years have elapsed since there was an "Order in Council" authorising n retirement of Field Officers and Captains, it is to b hoped that the same day which the vacancies for Cossessadents and second Commendants are filled up, an extensive full-pay retirement will also be given to the Captains—the greatest sufferers of all—because one-half can never expect to rise higher.

If it should be saked-What the Marines wish for?

it may be answered—Premotion for the War-Officers; Assimilation to the Ordennes Corps, in to the propor-tionate number of Field Officers; the mirroment of four Field Officers and four Captains annually, as is the case in the Artillary; and, in order to reader the Corps efficient, an outst, by the sale of commissions, and a resirement, upon a liberal scale.—I have, its., M. My opinions on the Lence, and other matters relating to the British Cavalry, have not been hestily formed; nor are they founded on such information as is to be picked in in hemother and delinerance in the Toleraham arracks and drill-grounds in the United Klugdom, or in witnessing a grand review or two in Germany but in fer more instructive fields. And as to the apprebut in mr more resident results and me to the land bearing antertained by your correspondent, that the transcend Military self-leve of these who object to the Lance would be affected were they to confess their real opinions," I shall briefly remark it is within the bounds of possibility that he measures other mun's corn by his

His question, as to "what is the real reason why the leace in less a weapon for the British Light Dragoen than for the Light Dragoen, or Uhien of Austria, Pruntic, and Resets," may be assured thus, and I have frequently done so before:—The paucity of our mounted soldiers renders it desirable that corry regiment should be equally shie to perform all the important duties of the out-p and to engage liberies any mounted force in Europe at close quarters.

My suggestions on the arms, &c. of the British Cavalry have been long before the public, and it is therefore quite unnecessary that I should recapitulate them. I bag, however, to observe-and in doing so, hope to be acquitted of egotism and vanity—that however upsound and vague my ressonings may appear in the eyes of your correspondent, and ardent admirer of the Lance and its fluttering pennon, all military man do not sgree with him; as the following extracts, from a letter which appeared last year in the Naval and Alilitary Gazette, fully prove :--

His experience, his intelligence, and the absence of all prejudice in propounding his opinious, will, I hope and believe, give thom weight in those quarters where theories may be reduced to practice."

I shall not follow " R. G. And lattle enough was it to beast of; for Cavalry of any other description could easily have performed a similar explait.

I beg to repeat what I statud in a former leiter on Lancers and Catempture, and to means your correspondent (who has adverted to it in the mound paragraph of his latter), that I still firmly silhers to the opinion therein given; and here it is, word for word:—"The asteristicle reason for the introduction of Calculaires and Lancers in reason for the introduction of University and Lencers in the British Service, was the important services supposed to have been performed by those in the French Service at Albuers and Wistrice. FURRERS SERVICE AND RELIEF OF EXCEPTERITE.

Fring Refer Active of the Neural and Mistary Search.

Sire, Your correspondent, M. M., from Pombroke College, Otson., in replying to my letter respecting regiments ordered to India, easy that his stheir persons prevent his pursoing the discussion forther. But I may be accomed for wishing to see myself right as to what I advanged on this subject.

I stated that since the 03d was in India, this regiment, after its tour at home (then six years instead with the four), had the most favoured station, maintend with the West India rotation; and I informed that their present destination afterded no just ground for complaint. M.

A. specifies notes corps which he compelves ought to have been erdered to the East before the 33d. He says that the 72d meyer served enywhere but at the Cope. No doubt by some agtraordinary arrangement the 72d had the Cope station twice, but this regiment had previously served to long in India, that is obtained the name of the Taujore Regiment. The I th had last the Medicarenean Tanjore Regissent. The 11th had last the Muditorranean station the same as the 53d, and is now ardered to Australia. The 13th had the American quatton in the same train. In 19th and two Apperion agricus in the same way, before the rotation system began, but this regiment had previously aimout continuous West India service, in a proportion which might well balance that of any corps in the East. In appealing of the Rifle bettalions, I said that the 2d batt., 60th, was the first ordered to an unfavourthe M part, both, was the use overest to an university also station, theore inferring that a similar destination could afford no ground of complaint to the Ist batt, when ordered to India. Yet M. A. says, "What on earth has the foreign service of the 8d batt, 60th, to do with that of the 1st batt.?" Just as much, I apprehend, m his comparisons of the service of any one regiment has to do with the service of any other with which the comparison may be drawn. The first is stated to be aggrisved, having had its two last foreign tours to Jamaica and Caylon, neither tour exceeding the ordinary period. As to Ceylon, it is certainly one of the best stations in salubrity, in emolument, and in its interior advantages; therefore the 61st is no worse off than any other corps.

In M. A.'s first letter, the 43d was specified as a corps unduly faroured; and in his lest apparal other regiments and adduced as having been partially exampled from eastern service. But we see that most of the corpe heretofore alleged to be favoured, are sent to the West Indice. The 7th is now under orders from Cibraltar; the 8th was some years in Jamsics, and only moved to America under the rotation system. The 52d, 68th, 70th, 71st. 81st. 85th are now, or have been recently, in the West Indies. Under the impartial system, which is the shown to admit of no exemption from the call of colonial duty, the seatern toor will come round to all, and, we may be allowed to hope, divested of its chiefest hard-slip-the prolonged term which still unhappily attaches

it. Un Antikn,
FUREIGN REUVICE, AND RELIEF OF RELIEBRING TO 186 Editor of the Anni and Millery Canette.
Bin,—Xon may revollent that when some time ago it was stated in your Paper that two or three regiments would leave this country in the course of the present year, to relieve others in India, that this information was contradicted in mother Mintery Journal. I would ask if regiments did not subusk this year for India, where she were they to go (6? Upon all other stations there is but one curps requiring retief, viz., the 74th in Camada. This country is now solorably quiet, and therefore its necessity for the present large force in it. There is a greater number of Intestry Regiments now in Ireland than there has been for many yours past-most since the year 1833—when the Courcion Bill was in exist-ence. There is also a very unukusi force in England. Taking this into consideration, it must be admitted that this year is a most favourable one for relaving regiments which have had a twenty years' banushment in the East. I wo of your correspondents have written to you on this subject, and one of these complains of the injustice of wording the SNA, 60th, and tlat, to India. I mand see that the two first have teason to complain. It is true that the 53d has been before in Jud'a, came from there alone 20 years ago, and there cannot be one individual Officer or ston who then belonged to he one individual Officer or stan who then belonged to the casps. This, repaired fluidhed the whole of its last tour of daty up the Madiferraneau, without a day's West liedle service. Look in the 37th, 22th, 78th, 84th, and 66th; and after the treatment they received estimany others now complete? The 66th has never yet aeroed in any part of the Rusi, said his last foreign service was assembly the same as the Ald. This battalion was not, of has been said, the 1sth or distinguished once, during the war is Spain; mother is it true that it has always had, like other fishe flattalions; good stations. It has insi-at diffusent persons long West ladin service: in those times it was not a Ride deeps. Here must, I think, he come great error when one of your correspondents at the come great error when one of your correspondents states that the 50th has not been might more than 11 years at home since raised. It is now love years from the Mediterinance, and were at home from the year 1864, when it returned from Camelo, to Oct., 1830, with the exception of one year in Particula. The Clist has, however, more reason to desemble, while the list has review in Jamelou and Coylon, and will not faire the list has advantage as the Shill in guing to a good elimate the come years at first. I obseinly agree as to the gealt, injustice in having her year retained the 43d in Commission minifing the Royale to the West Indies; and although aprelated of our Light Intentry Regiments have been sold letterly to the West Indies, nevertheless there has not been a fair and impartial Router kept for miny years. If there had, the 28d, 84th, and others would have healtifferent quarters alletted to those. Why could these regiments, at all evaluate, included to the first instance embarked for the Cape or Materials for a few years, and then ended their seveles in listle by caying, "We have now the 11th, 15th, 72d, and 88th, all ready for foreign service; why must injusting be done by sending the 53d, 66th, and the for India? This regiment left England in Feb., 1826, One of the regiments about to return from the East is the 2d or Queen's. This regiment left England in Feb., 1825, the same year and mouth as the Sist, yet no ratiof is assigned for the latter regiment. The 18th is, therefore, quite available for that perspect. You, Bir, lately remarked upon the great length of time regiments are kept in India, and propose ten years for all stations. I can-not see how you can relieve a regiment siter ten years' service in India, unless you increase that on healthy sixtions to twelve or filter years. The only other plan would be, by sither giving up some of our most useless Colonies (which the Authorities will not do), or clae, by a large increase to the Army. If all regiments now abroad in India, of above ten years' service, were to be relieved to-murrow, why, you must emback regiments which have not over more than them.

MENAMER.—An Officer from because says Sir Charles Napier has had a return made him from the Reloschess of the number of men they had on the field at Mesanes, and that two whole tribes were present, of which he know not, making a total of $5,000 of the seems. On examining the field returns, it appears that the firstisk focus was only 2200, and not 2800, as formedy stated. What a disportry—35,000 against 2200; it had been decemmend at the Durber by the Ameers, that avery kinconsum can, woman, and child were to have been put to death, so sure were they of victory—except for Charles, who was to have had a ring, ettached to a claim, peaced through his noss, and so have been led about as a prisoner. ### Naval & Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1844,

Duning the past week attention has been frequently called, in and out of Parliament, to the insufficient Naval force kept affect. We are not about to dispute this matter, but we must say that England has a vast fleet, Chich could be soon efficient; and therefore we the less feet any evil from the pencity of vessels in commission. In the event of a war we mare a NAVY. We, however, think it, in these days of steam, quite as essential to the safety of the United Kingdom, that we should possess AN ARMY to resist an enemy on our shores, as to have a Navy to guard our coasts. Let us survey desorily our long and exposed sea-line-what have we on it to resist a landing in sufficient force to destroy our towns, may, even our arsenals ! We have a more hundful of men belonging to the Regular Army at home ; India and the Colonies. and Foreign garrisons, absorb the main part of the Army and, with the exception of the Populoners, and son Youmen Cavalry, England is literally left to be defended with a force scarcely sufficient for the court immediately opposite France. It may be said that the Militia is to the regular Army, what the ships in advance and in ordimary are to the Commissioned Navy. This aught to be the case, but the case is not so. There is not at present, we believe, a single regiment of Militia even belloted, much loss embodied and treingd. This truly constitutional Force ought to be placed an efficient condition, and called out regularly for training-and with the Militia the Pensions in assisting to train the young men of the Militie, would be found doubly useful to the State. It may not by some be considered expedient to bellot the whole Militia of the United Kingdom. But in this opinion we cannot agree. We would say ballot for the full force; but, for the present, only embody, arm, and train the Militia of the Maritime Counties of England. By so doing the Regular Army could be made available for Ireland and Scotland, in the event of a sudden war, and the rest of the Militia being balloted, could soon be rendered effective. We have long looked with anxiety for some state measure, amending our position for defence; and since John Bull is still jealous of adding to the Standing Army, let him have what he has always most fairly considered a Constitutional Army-the Militla-for the defeace of his home and hearth. We frenkly tell him that at present they are without any state defence Steam has destroyed our inviolability as an island, and is is not when a hostile force has been landed on the shores of Old England, and has ravaged our towns and hambets, that we are to set about balloting, arming, and training our gallant Militia. Let the cry regarding the Navy be however exeggerated, we cannot be charged with having overstated the utter inadequacy of our Military Establishments in the present state of European effairs

The embarkation of the 53d, 69th, and 61st Reginents for India, and the proceeding onward of the 80th from New South Wales also to India, will place at the close of the present year a large European Force at the disposal of Sir Henry Hardinge, should the uffairs in the Punjab have taken a hostile aspect towards us, as we feel confident they must do sooner or later. have no more doubt of our being compelled, in self defence, to occupy the Punjab, than we had of our being furced into the subjegation of Meinde-an opinion we gave long before it received the oredence it deserved, baving been formed on information of the highest authority. The embarkation of four strong regiments almost simultaneously for India, we have good reasons for knowing has not been ordered solely for the purpose of relieving four regiments from that country. If affire are in such a satisfactory state as to admit of the return of 2d, 3d, 13th, and 40th Regiments next year, we shall be much surprised. The 13th may be spared, but we much doubt the return of the other three till 1846. In India we must always expect events to arise which will cause the detention of Her Majesty's regiments beyond the usual period of their service; and this alone ought to induce the Government to arrive for the ordinary period of Indian service being twelve or fourteen years at most, so that on an emergent demand for European troops, the corps might not be detained beyond fifteen years from England. In begging for this reduction of its years' Indian service, we cannot be charged with soliching more than ought to he granted. A soldier embarking with his regiment for India, is, on an average, a man of four years' service; is it not only fair that he should return after fifteen years, to end his killitary cafear in his native land? The records of Regiments amply prove that very few men survive their present tous of twenty or twenty-two years. The regiments are filled up again and again. Men embark for India depressed with the feeling that the tour of service is too long to give thom any prospect of returning home. Is this right? Is it humans? We ask for the regiments any under orders for India, an assurance that a neighboration will occure the return of the regiments after timbre or feartness years' service. To all this it may be said, "Volunteers for India are never difficult to find?" No. There ale in every regiment men always ready to try change. Velusteering is no proof in contradiction to our assertion. Has it ever been tried, "Velenteers for the regiments not in or going to Ludin?" Hen it over been bried how many men would eten out of the ranks of the ambarking regiment? We would like to see the experiment tried.

Wa had no doubt of the justice of the compleints so frequently made, tenching the inconveniences and discomfort, to the extent of the andangerment of health, to which soldiers were considerally expected when embarked on board hired or chartered steam-ressels, in counting veyages, and in pearing and repeating between England, Iroland, and Scotland. We have been amongst those who strenzously advocated the employment of Government versels, or suitable treep-ships, for the conveyance of the Military, upon all practicable secucions; but in so doing, we were, as we expressed, formerding the interests of the soldier as well as of the public, steiring to work out an improvement, and not the more transfer of a bed system and imperfect arrangement from a private vessel to a public one. From communications which here reached us, we are impressed with the bolisf that something yet remains to be done to perfect the system of removing depots and regiments by sea, especially in short voyages of from one to three or four days' duration. During the past and present year Government steam-vessele have been more frequently employed than herstofore. One advantage is, or ought to be, secured to the soldier by the employment of these steamers, namely, that one system of arrangements should prevail for the umberketten, distribution on board, and disemberkation of the troops: hence, in a short time, each depot or detechment on embarking would know precisely the routine of giving in arms and ammunition, stowing away accontraments, and being told off to mer -arrangements indispensable for order and comfort, but which, when imperfectly understood, are tedious, and to the soldier, hungry and tired at the end of a merch, may seem barasting and vegations. Sallors regard soldiers with but little good-will, aspecially on board ship, and are not always disposed to promote their comfort or to render them assistance, whilet the position of a soldier on ship-board is at all times so replate with the miseries of crowded space, heat and foul smells between decks, bad fare and see-sinkness, that he is by no means anxious to prolong his sojourn in such disagreeable quarters. It is, therefore, no less a measure of policy than of humanity to curtail de far as possible a period during which the utility of troops is lost and their efficiency impeired.

A Government vessel destined for the conveyance of troops, and appropriated either permanently or temporarily for that service, should afford more space and comfort in her fittings than a private vessel taken up at the moment by contract, and such a vessel might reasonably be expected to make an equally quick, if not a more speedy passage under similar circumstances. These conditions are by no means invariably fulfilled. We have recently heard of a Government steamer employed in conveying troops, that occupied twenty-two hours in performing the passage between Liverpool and Kingatown, in smooth water, and with canvass set a considerable portion of the time. The mail packets, as inwell known, perform the same voyage in 10 hours; and although it may be scarcely fair to expect a vessel laden with treeps and baggere to keep pass with the mail, yet the difference is disproportionately great, and it would be many to quote instanges of contract vessels laden with troops, running from Liverpool to Dublin in fourteen hours, and discharging their burthen within turnty instead of forty hours. There is mother point connected with this subject to which our attention has been drawn—the difficulty attendent upon messing Officers on these abort voyages. By the Passes Warrant of 19th Oct., 1842, and the late revision or Addenda, deted 5th May, 1844, provision is made for the messing of Officers in Queen's ships, or in vessely hired or chartered by the public, the rate of al. lowenie is prescribed, and in some cases the option is granted to Officers of providing their own mess. Bron in contrast descent the Master is board to feralth a table in gaginest of the prescribed contribution; but in a Gavenius at steam-ressel employed on this service, no - Chini such sandition exists, and Officers are therefore required

For voyages of a month or more in duration, this last method may be convenient, but it is religantly inapplicable

the Chennel Islands. A detachment or depot embarked for treaty-four hours cannot conveniently been out their most equipage, and it is equally obvious that the Office require their meals. At present their only choice in between an unpleasantly long fast, or hanqualing upon the ration of sait boof and bloods, without the said of kaife and fork, or other applianeous of the first stages of civilination. A depot at the end at a day's march to shipped on baard a Government steamer to sail the same night; the Officers then fifet receive an infimation that they that meet them selves; they have not time or apportunity to make even a scanty provision for the morrow, nor have they (their buggage being all stowed away) may means of obtaining across to their mess equipage. In this case the blame devalves upon the authors of the Pessage Warrent, who have neglected, as it seems to us, to make it applicable to the particular case in question. The omission is at present productive of much insecrenience, and we advert to use it is one that is manifestly easy to rectify ar remove altogether, by rendering it imperative on the Commander of such vessels to provide a table for the Military Officers during their brief sojonen, adopting, at the same time, such arrangements with the Command may enable him to do so without inconvenience, and determining a suitable scale of remuneration, to be contributed by the Officers, for their meeting whilst on board.

THE following Address of the French Roman Cath to Daviel O'Connell is from the pen of Count Montalembert, who has lately taken so preminent a part in the attacks on the University of Paris

" Fod a long time the popularity of your name has been as great amongst us as that of the most illustrious persons in our history. We admire your courage and p verance; we are startled at the sound of your invin verance; we are started at the sound of your invincible language; we envy you the power you have called up in the service of your country and our charch. Thanks to your inenhancible elequence—thanks to the Catholic faith, the true foundation of the brotherly love of men and of nations—we recognize and love I fellund as a sister, and as a victim of her unconquerable fidelity to the Catholic faith.

This is all very fine, although we do not exactly com rehend the "expistion of popularity;" it appears from the tenor of this document that sedition of treason are praiseworthy, provided they are antertained by a Cathelic subject against a Protestant Government; finally, it gives one a great idea of the capacity and elasticity of the souls of the French Catholics, that they are filled with the image of O'Cotajell, without bursting!

It is going somewhat too far, when an Officer price fato the unguarded bilingity of the mostreom table of Officers, and upon the overstrained representations of starched skrillens, resorts to the unperalleled encepture of broading up a mean, separating its members and infliction inconvenience, so well as undersited of upon those who happen to be placed under his authority. This is a monstreet, as intolerable sevil, even now; although mitigated by our late Scarefary-at-Wer, then whom a better friend the Army never had, by the granting "the barrel and bulk allowance" in 1839. As Sam Slick would say we have no "water power" in this colony; so, dragging up material and creature comthis colony ; so, dragging up material and creature com-forts to Colosberg by bullock waggens is a tedious, expensive affair.

I have alluded to viewing matters through the media of "local comperisons," in a colony why should some employes he made "It and the other four!?" Methinks, with regard to the Income-tast, the Military and civil functionaries should be placed effectly on a similar footing. All the civil an magnates, from the Governor downwards, "the Judges, the Trensurers, the Councillors, the Sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces," are exampt from this impost, and therefore do not display "an ignorant impationed of taxation." On this tax being first imposed, the Custom Department here was subjected to it; but through the replicentation of the sealous, astute, and indistinguis collector, this "dreadful hardship" was insrantly remedied.

To my humble and paradox in fact, a perfect Pons asinorum why allow learned judges and executive councillors, having very ample salaries, should be exempted from a tax, which falls upon such a milenow as a Captain of Infantry. As for the principle advanced, that one set of men are paid out of the Colonial, and the other from the Imperial revenue, and that they are not, therefore, parallel and analogous bases—to such charlatanoris, I shall only say, "Maximy, quis non, Jupiter exclamat, simul atque audivit."

Again, the uniforms and equipments of Officers should, in justice, pass through the vestoms free of duties. It is rather voxatious to have an expensive "set of traps," producal from one of these awful gentlemen—a London tailor—further lagressed to price by the Custom House myrmidons clapping a Colonial "folus per shent" on them. How comes it to pass the, Sir, that all descriptions of those amomalous non-descripts—Foremen of Works, Ordannos and Medical Clorks—the numerous tribe of understrappers—the quill divers—the "pharmacopoles, Mendich minus, balatones; how genue comes."

FRA DIAVOLO From the Eurthly Parades, called the Cape of allope, March 17.

Duning the last six months we have received almost innumerable communications respecting the "Dress" of the Army Medical Officer, from which we might be led to suppose that this class of Officers had happily no other cause of complaint that the Souramouch costume inflicted on them-a costume one would be inclined to Imagine adopted to keep in vivid remembrance the pretended connection in the olden time between the itine-Faut mountebank with his Merry-Andrew (quasi enrgeon and assistant) and the medical profession, and thus repdet this class of Officers rather physics of derision to the Army than as a part and parcel essentially belonging to it, requiring from all hands respect and support, so necessary for its welfare and well-doing; or, perhaps, it was intended, as a facetions friend bints, so a " kindly warning " towards the medical profession generally, by thus decking out the Aledical Officers as so may Source erous, to latinulate all the young aspirants of education, talent, or of gentler malike habits and ideas, from committing so ogregious a blunder, when attring into professional life, as seeking to join Her Majonty's Army. to bear about them the outward and visible sign, when hedseked out in the habitiments of decided humiliation. the first test presented to them on joining of the ter spectability they were in future to be held in-

Having given our opinion as regards "Dress," and considering the various letters on the subject as so much time idly wasted, we would entreat Medical Officers to turn their thoughts from that merely collateral grievense, and exert all their talents and energies to seek to obtain "ra--dress ') of others of a more weighty nature that press on them. In treating this subject, a lesson may be taken from the inductions taught to examine disease, in which, however severe or strikingly invetorate from the symp-Ioms presented, it may seem to be, yet these are not always worthy of attention, and secreely saything is done for amendment till the souse has been accortained; that once discovered, the treatment is adopted accordingly. setting saids, as already stated, as little deserving of attention, perhaps, the various anomalous and unaccountable symptoms complained of in progressu that eccompanied it. And such, in somewhat like manner, is the " Dress' of the Military Medical Officer; 'tis but a symptom mixed up with others of the complaint they labour under, i. r., one of humiliation, injustice, and debasement; and if this mere symptom of it is alone continued to be pointed out and alone prescribed for, even to have it successfully remedied, as the respective writers seem to anticipate, what, let us ask, would it amount to after all? The cause of complaint would not be removed—it would still remeiu in full vigour with undiminished force. They are thus exceting themselves to combat as it were shadows, and exhausting their energies, comparatively, with more trifleswhilst the master cause of all is overlooked and allowed to remain unassalied, and perhaps, too, for the present unassallable, without any cheering prospect of success, unless they are able to muster up a moral force from public opinion to place them in their proper position, and remove the low unfavourable impressions too evidently feit for them as a body by the high Military authorities, or. perhaps, even the Government itself, who most injudiclously, we must say, for the advantage of the public service, seem to permit them to be kept as a kind of degraded class; and, it would seem, desmed by these authorities of very secondary estimation, and merely telerated, but evidently not acknowledged as strictly or properly belonging to the Service. It may be asked what proof we have of this? Directly, perhaps, none-indirectly, a great But ere we purme this sale of further, we must turn first principles, and the redall the circumstances the seem in some measure to be forgotten-the remote and proximate cause of the situation of the Medical Officers at the present day being made so visitly superior to what it formerly was.

After the short peace of Amisas, when there was a renewal of the war with Prence, and we again had "buckle on our armour," and prepare afresh for news: or the war with France, and we again had to "buckle on our armour," and prepare afresh for the renewed contest, the actual state of the medical branch of the Army was found to be such from sheer neglect and the want of due encouragement of the part of both the Civil and Military Government of the day, that it became absolutely imperative to do something to induce better educated men to enter the Service and therefore to hold out much greater adventures accertwar for so desirable a out much greater advantages every way for so desirable a purpose than was ever previously thought accessive to offer; for the fact of the matter was, at the time slinded to, the Medickl Department was at a sad "discount" in to, the Medical Department was at a set "discent" in public estimation, and sodsequently but few well-advanced men of gentleman-like habits were found to compose it, or could indeed be found willing to juster its ranks. To meet this state, so injurious in sound policy to the well-duing, we may say generally of the Sprice—for it is an undispated fact, at least in one sense—"a steelical branch of anthrowledged efficiently is really and truly its right arm." many regulations were adopted, giving the department different grades of rank, with a corresponding gradested scale of a higher rate of pay, and a provision also for long services, or otherwise as might be, an extrement. Mark, this liberality entirely preceded from a transmission of and a strange design to minute an action. ment. Mark, this liberality entirely proceeded from a knowledge of, and a strang desire to remady an acknowledge of, and a strang desire to remady an acknowledge of, and thereby as we have already states, indusing a more efficient and well-educated eight of professional men to enter the Service, to whom the Santa slight intrust with confidence the well-being of the toddier, the residence of war, either placed "in the bettle-e-front," or the too-oft-experienced pestilential atmosphere of the sent or western Troples, whate the services of the British shifter so oft leads him. The temptation failed may be sent a measure to produce the slagified effect; yet the upwastinges held out, compared after all with the graff distinguishings, the great distinguishings, enced both mentally and bodily, by the Medical Officer under certain circumstances, be it in war or peace, with the positive certainty if belonging to the Staff, and if his life was apared, of encountering during his service, and re-encountering again and again the most pestiferous poison in our Transatiantic colonies or elsewhere, where the troops might have to be sent to, neutralised in a great measure the expectations raised, notwithstanding all the superior advantages offered.

The odnesquenes therefore was, as might naturally be expected, that the Army is not now (as it ever should be made, from motives, we sepant, of true and nound policy) held at a premium in the satimation of the young profes-sional men of superior takents and endouments, departing rior talente and endowments, de from the respective schools after metriculation, and shout to enter en professional life. This, to all who think or reflect on the subject, and have the real interest of the to peridetly neutralise still more say letent pencheni a faw might perhaps entertain for the Army, contemplating particularly too the bias of the young and ardens mind, instead of holding out allurements, taken in combination, to produce so very desirable an and, the Authorities, on the contrary, thoroughly at the very outset so disgust the candidate by the detested habiliments awarded his profeation, that he, in common with all others, is led to somaider such nought but a "brand," or, as it were, the "Tower-stamp," to give still greater currency to the sterling humiliation thus gratuitously about to be imposed on him. But when it is descovered with what a niggerd polm most of the advantages held out by the comparative rank offered by a former Government are and have been doled out to the Medical Officers, bla choice is formed, -he at once repudiates the Service as undeserving of his further consideration. Look, for instance, to the whole Code of Military Regulations even as regards comparative rank; or if we descend even to the very allowances granted to Military Officers filling certain Staff appointments, given doubtless to support their rank and respectability in society—for none of a and then examine, as a proof of what we dvance, even those same allowances granted to Medical Officers for ostensibly similar purposes, they bring of the same or superior comparative rank to the former, we shall find that the Aighest rate of lodging-money allowed to the highest grade of the Medical Department is 52?, per annum, whilst the lowest granted even to Suhaltern Officers filling cortain minor Staff appointments is 80?, per annum !—In like manner the allowances at home for a servant to the Medical Staff Officer of the highest rank is Is. per diem, to the Military Staff Officer an above, la. 6d. Certain auburdinate Military Staff Officers. m well as Aides-de-Cump, have each two horses allowed hem; the highest grade of Medical Officer is allowed two dones also, yet observe, this is not always permitted to be drawn for, unless it can be satisfactorily proved that the duty to be performed requires them. Again, mark the difference as regards the Military Staff Officer; as the regulations point out the number allowed for that situation, he accordingly draws the amount without question for the same, as a matter of course, though the duties he may have to perform really require none at all !

We repeat, all this is essentially unjust and contrary, it would appear, to the avoned scutiments of the highest Millwould appear, as one system extends to the highest Mili-tary authority, who in a communication from the Horse Guarde in 1827 respecting the comparative rank of Military and Civil Officers states, "The general regulations which define the relative rank of all the Civil Officers of the Army were framed for the express purpose of regulating their correspondent chain to Quarters, Allowances, Principally, &c. &c. &c." clearly stating that such relative rank is not to extend to "the exercise of any Military authority or command whatever." Be it so. But now er and how this comparative rank is carried let us furth out in practice as regards those very points. We have already shown that comparative rank is of no use to accore Medical Officers the intended benefits, attheradd—as to any precedency that might naturally be sup-posed to be greated to them in purely Military or mixed posed to be granted to them in purely Military or mixed society, or as ingertia forage or servants' allowances, quarters or ledging-minusy in lieu thereof, or yet in a still more remerkable mounter as regards Prise-money; for instead of being diamed in the field according to their respective ranks, First Class Staff-Sarguon, Deputy Inspector-General, or even Inspector-General moording to their comparative ranks with the Military, the whole, the staff-Sarguon of Diameters and Staff-Sarguon or the staff Diameters. to their comparitive ranks with the Military, the whole, as regards Principles are classed as Captains! Let us now put the qualifies to any unbiassed and disinterested mind, Is this just, list, or homourable, or is accordance with the shotested spinion coming from such high eathority? Let us also list, were the position of Medical Officers otherwise, or more life advantages to be obtained therefrom obtaining or more life advantages to be obtained therefrom obtaining as more life advantages to be additional therefrom considered south his digible—possessing estilicient high resource source or its states translated or the privileged orders of the states to flick their body, as is the dest in the Royal hattlery and Englances, would the Medical Department

Little, therefore, is thought more stary to be done for a pictodan class (though such would be aven-tually for the good of the state generally, and for the Army in particular) when the sease or efficients of the patricians could not directly be bounded thereby.

This brings we naturally to tak, what hardships, what designs, have the Rititary and officers undergons that the Medical Officers have not shared in? And although merhans the latter may Officers undergone that the Medical Officers have not shared in? And although perhaps the latter may seldom be in the front ranks of an army in attack or defense, yet are they not in the general melie in the fuld? expensed to the various evolutions that take plans in a hard day's contest—both to the fire, the begonet, or salve of the enemy? Let it be remaindered, wherever the buttle is hottest there the Medical Officer's accretous are most consistent of the taken of mercanel denses. are most required, so that regardless of personal danger his duty obliges him to be wish his brother soldiers or wounded courseles. There he is to be found in the wounded courades. There he is to be found in the midst of the fire and clang of arms, pursuing his professional occupation salesly and collectedly, buelly occupied, perhaps, in amputating a dreadfully-lacerated limb, and whilst thus occupied is himself faid low amongst the wounded! This is no fancied case get up for the occupien; it is an absolute fact; and many assessmore or less muliar must be familiar to all the old Medical Officers of the America arms in the later was the family of the later. number must be familiar to all the old Medical Officers of the Army who served in the late war. If, after all this, they are but, as designated, "Civil Officers," let it, however, be recollected that their civil occupation, in common with many Military Officers, is as frequently in the tented field, 'midat the heavy din of arms, as it is in the "hospitals in the rear. We, therefore, deny in tota, particularly as we consider it the foundation stone of the great injustice hitherto dealt out to them, the applicability of the term thus designating the Medical Officers of the Army. Although the profession equally beloans of the Army. Although the profession equally belongs to civil life, we take on us to affirm it saturely alters its complexion when pursued in a Military one; it thus be-comes a part and percet of the Service Itself. We admit, however, they are non-combutants, but at the same time never, then, indeed, might be with some apparent degree of justice a lies of distinction of fractions, then, indeed, might be with some apparent degree of justice a lies of distinction drawn between the Military and Medical Officers, for then would the Military be purely and entirely "combatants," necessarily coming hand to band with the fee; but at the present day, in the atrest and liveral meaning of the term, how few in the field ever have to defend themselves as the term "combat" implies, or have, as of old, "to hack or hew their way with their trusty awards?" From the nature their way with their trusty swords?" From the nature of warfare now pursued, the Military Officer, in common with the Medical, suffers most from the fire of the enemy, be the distance in the field far or near. We, therefore, authors, whatever class of officers whose position and trecessary duty exposes them to such basards, abould be classed, in spirit and in fairness, as one engaged in the persit of the day, and thesefore to all intents and purposes a "Military (Miless"—observe, not with the view of assuming my pretension to military command, but that they about bave all the advantages arising therefrom, be it of whatsonver nature it may, pecuniary as regain Prize-Money, or otherwise, according to his standing and comparative rank, entitling him to honorary distinctions, similar in some measure to what is bestowed in the different foreign Services to this class of Officers.

SPAIN.—The subjoined borrible details, extracted from an official bulletin, published in the Mudrid Claustic of the lat, are worth recording:—

"Between 1st Feb. and 15th Luce, the 'faction' in the Masstrago have sustained the following losses:— Killed on the field of battle, 54 men; shot, after being made prisoners, 120 men; pardoned, for various reasons, 107. Among the prisoners shot are the Chiefs El Serrador, Viscaro, Lauva, and Taso ; Marsal and his Lieut., Pilarea, Cotarro and his second, Martines El Serano, Tarenques, and Galo de Santa Oleois and 23 Generals or Officera, including one Colonel, one Commandant, three Captains, and 13 Lieutements. Since the 29th May, 14 spice and 19 Officers, coming from France, and a certain number of douaniers who had joined the bands, have been shot. Gen. Don Juan de Villalongs," adds the Gazette, " has, by his energetic activity, not a little contributed to this result."

DENNAUR.—Copenhagen, June 26.—"The steamer Heela, Capt. Monrier, with a crew of 120 men, and armed with mortars and cannon of large calibre, has just taken her departure with sealed orders. The King went on board, and addressed the crew, exhorting them to maintain the honour of the Danish flag, and fraternise with the Norwegian and Swellish squadrons. The Hecla is bound for Falmouth, where she will join the Gesion and Thetis under l'rince Frederick. The Danish aquadron will afterwards be joined by the Norwegian frigate Frequencies of the Swedish frigate Josephine, which, it is said, will have a Swedish Prince on board. The combined squadron will then proceed, toboard. The combined squadron will then proceed to-wards Morocco."

DOMENICA.—We regret to state that a reveil has taken place among the lately emancipated part of the popula-tion, and that it has been necessary to processe Martial Low. The plea of the revolters is, that an attempt was to be made through the Census Act to deprive them of their liberty. Through the alsority of a datachment of the 46th, under Captain Bremner; another of the 1st West India Regiment, under Captain Murray, and the Militia, the rebellion was quelled in the most prompt manner; more than 250 rebels are in prison to await their trial.

The appointment of Gen, Riddell to the command of the Southern Division of the Army, has given great umbrage to some of our cotemporaries. One says Oue cays it is a great injustice to General Lealie to be supers and another says it is equally unjust to overlook the ciaims and Military services in the field of General Wa-hab—but " who shall decide when Doctors disagree?" The Court of Directors have ordered that the Officers of H.M.'s Service should held two Division and two Brigade commends in this Presidency, and that for the latter, the Seniors as a matter of right should succeed; it, however, appears that there is one Brigade held by a Queen's Officer in excess of the Resolution, and Gen. Leslie being the Junior ought not to hold a command, and that by his so doing, an injustice has been done to the Officers of the Madres Army is very clear. So far we think Lord Tweeddale has done right in appointing General Riddell to Trichinopoly, and thus upsetting one of Lord Elphinstone's jobs. We have heard that General Wahab's claims were judged on public grounds entirely, and that his Excellency on referring to a list of his serviers found that he had not distinguished himself par-ticularly even when commanding the 52d Reg., and that res sufficient on record to induce an opinion, that his claims were all moonshine. General Riddell, though his services may not have been the most bril. lient, is yet a most efficient and respectable Officer, and had served with his regiment longer than many can boust —a large portion of which time in the field.

It would be well if the Press would adopt means to become better acquainted with subjects of this nature, before they presume to dictate to the Government, and thereby avoid creating a bad feeling in the Service—a feeling that improper influences have been used in the bestowal of patronage, when, were the truth known, it would be found that no such thing was the cate-or was likely to be. Madras Examiner, May 9.

In our issue on Thursday we easually noticed the removal of General Leslie from Trichinopoly to Bellary; we shall now make a few remarks on the injustice which this order inflicts on the Officers of the Hon. Company's Service. On a former occasion we alluded to the Court's order directing only two Brigades in the Madras Presidency to be held by Officers in the Royal Army, and that those two appointments were, as a matter of right, held by Generals Allan and Sewell, and we then indulged a hupe that Lord Tweeddule would at once remove this most just cause of compluint of the Company's Officers.

The order above referred to we know is most reli-The order above referred to we know is most religiously observed in Bengal, and on a recent occasion of the the theath of a Company's Officer, in command of a division, and a Queen's Officer, as meat renier Officer assuming command, a strong reministrance was made against it, and an Officer of the Company's Service was ordered temporarily to take the command. How different at Madras I Here there are the 'two seniors in command of Brigades, and General Leelin a third in addition to Brigades, and General Leelie a third, in addition to Colonel Jones, commanding Fort St. George, and Colonel McBean, commanding Moulmein. Hence, then, they have five commanded in Madras instead of two. It is true that Fort St. George and Moulmein are held by whoever may be the Senior at the Station, yet there are now seven Lieutennut-Colonels commandin g regiments who are senior to Colonel McBean, and some under 32 years' service. We have heard that Lord Elphin-stone, when told that General Leslie's appointment was contrary to the orders of the Court, blushed for his job, and said that he would take an opportunity of operating it when the division became vacuut, as it has now done.

We hoped for better things from Lord Tweeddale, and, particularly, as we had heard that he had expressed his opinion very plainly respecting the appointment of General Leslie to a Brigade Command by his prede-cessor, and we did flatter ourselves that when he had an opportunity of undoing the injustice without any marked severity, that he would have done so. There was a report, indeed, that such had been the case, and that Colonel Doveton was appointed to Bellary, and Wilson to Jaulnab, but we fear the benefal influence which for ever thwarts his Lordship's good intentions, had its sway in the cuse.

Of course we should think that every Lieutenant-Colonel in the Company's Madres Army, would immediately memorialise the Court sgainst this flagrant invesion of their just rights, more especially as it is in direct contravention of the Court's orders.—Madres Recember,

The History of China, from the cartiest Records to the Treaty with Great British in 1848. By Thisman Thornton, Esq., Member of the Royal Asiatic Seriety, In two volumes. Vol. I. Allem and Co.

HAVING, we believe, completed his work upon India, Mr. Thornton has here fallen back upon his "History of China," much of the untertain for which, he informs un, he collected several years ago; and the early portion of the volume before us was printed so far here as IEEE, This will not in the slightest degree impair its interest we its value, at the present mentions, as it relates unly in the first stages of Chinese history, and some down his lower than the year 430 of the Christian ten.

We had long considered that what might be termed a popular filatory of China was weating; and Mr. Thoraten has here an excellent opportunity for supplying the decideratum. Mr. Davis produced a pleasant, useful, and gratifying book; but it was not upon a sufficiently large scale to be wholly entiatestory; besides which, we now at least require, in addition to the leaformation thus brought before it a children and content and the strongers. gratifying wore, and statisticatory; besides which, we now at least require, in addition to the information thus brought before its, a skilfat selection, condensation, and arrangement of the multitudinous particulars which have come to our knowledge within the last two on three years; involving, of course, a general view of the origin, commencement, progress, and termination of heatlities between England and China. For all this, the field is invitingly open to Mr. Thornton. So far as he has yet proceeded—
"The form into which the author has east the historical nurrative is that of ensula, the overest being recorded in chronological series, under the reign of each ruler. He has not observed the severe rules applicable to historical composition, which would be inconvenient in transing of a nation so possilar and so little known: he has been discurring, critical, minute, and even philological, where necessary. Riographical streams of remarkable patchages are approach in motes, and a review of the estate of China is subjuised to each dynasty, entracing the religion, policy, statistics, and manners of the people at the different particle."

The degree of credit due to the early Chinese annals is ably discussed in the Preface; and Mr. Thornton, making due allowance for certain chronological discrepancies, ap-due allowance for cartain chronological discripuncies, appears fully justified in drawing a favourable conclusion respecting their authenticity.

"Amongst the facts which corroborate the asmals of China, may be restoned, fart, the chronology, exceptuated upon a plan which, unless it be indeed a gross imposture, descentrates the existence of the Oningse nation and of the instead records so fur back as s.c. 269. It may be said that this date carries the mank of China beyons the Deinge; but although Unsher has placed that great event s.c. 2545, inc spoth, as well as the Mundane era, is extremely uncertain. The Septengint taxt fixes the general fixed at n.c. 2545, and the Art de Verfier in Delea at n.c. 350, more than 900 years active than Uncher. The medium is n.c. 2507. Their historical chronology is, however, acknowledged by the Chinase to be uncertain this n.c. 441, after which it is neaset; and this distinction itself is favourable to the conclusion of its genuinecess, since it would have been as easy to make the antecedent as the subsequent portion cansistent."

Other corroborative evigênce of the sethenticity of the Chinase annals is found in their carefully-recorded notices of equipses and other colestial pheapmens, which corres-

The present transit from Cairo to Suez, for paracagers and beggage, through a distance of 84 miles, in an open desert, occupies an average of 94 hours, at a very heavy expense. It is contended that by the proposed Suez railroad, the cost of which Mahomed Ali is willing to bear, "and to commence it at once, provided the British Government agree to cartain arrangements for the future payment for conveying the mails, when the railroad is finished," the journey might be performed in four hours, and at less than half of the present expense. Taking into account the passenger frails in a present, the conveyance of goods in bulk, the travellars to Mesca, fic., and the conveyance of mails, with a train travelling cash way gvery day, or in that projection, an adequate revenue would be produced on the investment, and the repenses of working be paid. According to fit. Galloway's showing, the other schemes which have been suggested are imprecitable. The Grandfather, A Novel. By the late Miss Ellen Pickering, Author of "Nan. Darrell," "The Fright," &c. 3 Vols. Newby.

INTRODUCED by a brief Preface from the pum of Elisabeth Youatt, a machinement work of Ellen Pickering's cannot be attempted than acceptable to the novel-cading beth Youatt, a mostoumous work or serious common country than acceptable to the novel-conding world. With findularly less pretencion, and infinitely more merit than many, the decembed, too carry lack, never failed to excite the attention of her readers, to assume their minds, and to impress shutary lessons on their heatts. All Miss Pickering's writings have been justly described as more or less "distinguished for a feminise executives at more or rese "distinguished for a feminise gracefulness of style, merging pherastely from the paying to the patietic; and pleasing from their very truthfulness and simplicity." We are here told and taught, not to "forgot, that as sarely as the cloud must come for avery one of us, so will the sunshine over follow to chase army its gloom."

Rdith Leelie; a Novel. 3 rats. Newby.
Two is a strange, wild, rambling story, full of all sorts of possible and impossible adventures, related in a dreamy, preserve-mad style, that out-Ossiane Casian. Edith Leslie is, of course, a heroine of matchless charme; and she has a fine Spanish bloodhound, Mateor—rather an odd companion for a young lady i who, upon two or three occasions, maters a completions figure, and is at last, by postical injustice, decended to perial. Here is plenty of fore, with plenty of romanou mand in the notes appended to such volume—by, we almost suspect, "another hand"—a vectory of stanch, sound, anti-popish remarks. For instance:

"The Church of England and the Church of Rome cannot exist together. Either must our holy monarchy be subverted, or the Pope how down his head. Whatever ne survered, or the rope now news me sass. Whatever immunities, whatever privileges Protestants grant the one, let them be assured they are arming their enemies, atrengthening them for a florest attack; appearing the woll's appetite for a while, not gatisfying the monater."

"The Protestent Established Church of Ireland is in a far more healthy state thus the mother Church is England. The pressure from without, the fierce attacks of Papiete, have conned her to keep her armour on; each bright and beautiful she appears in that otherwise be nighted land."

Thus production stands in the same relationship to the genuine novel, a mirror of existing life and manners, a the broadest farce stands in to the legitimate comedy. Th lover of fun, drollery, and burishque, to the sacrifice aneture, truth, and probability, will derive assumement from lever of fon, drollery, and surranges, to the sacrince of nature, truth, and probability, will derive accusement from the pages; but its lable is too filmey and transparent, as its impossible incidents are span out to a most wearing length. The "Mysterious Man" is a native of the length, who cames to London with the view making his fortune by a matrimoutal operatation—i uniting himself with some "aligible famale;" and, effect this with the more facility, he assumes the title Court Bundleds.

However, in each, the hind-hearted bimberrer gets a good wife, they not by advartisements, and a fortune also, though not his marriage.

"The Robbers' Cave." Nickisson.
Wm cannot congratulate the author of "The Robbers' Cave" upon any improvement upon that production in the present. The scene professes to be laid at flavenna; yet the characters, allusions, and everything clee, are English — exaggerated English. Though without the slightest pretension to originality, there is something rather picasant and amusing in the conception of the plot—with such a plot, Sheriden Knowles would have done much; but the execution is, in all respects, lamentably feeble. The persons of the drama have neither nature nor force to sustain them; and the low parts are those on-nor force to sustain them; and the low parts are those o-not comedy but—force, purlesqued. Moreover—did the author never happen to meet with a certain well-known couplet, the second line only of which we shall cite?—

"---- want of decency is want of sange."

[For the " Naval and Hillary Gazetta. ")

THE present season, which has dried up many ponds, and occasioned in many places a dearth of water, has caused me to picture to myself some poor Red-coats or Blue-juckets, as is often their fats, stranded on an inhospitable shere, and perishing of thirst, while there is abundance of fresh water absolutely within their reach, of which they know not.

It may happen, than, that such may be the lot, one day or other, of some who may chance to read this paper in the Conette. I will, therefore, endeavour to point out how the ship reck-d may find more than enough water to assuage his thirst.

The method is simply this:—With a piece of the wreck, or any convenient thing that can be laid hold of, make an excavation in the sand, a little above high-water mark, two or three feet deap. In a short time the bottom of this pit will be covered with a food of water, intercepted in its passage, from the minus fand-aprings, as it percolates through the sand towards the sea. Should a cask have floated from the wreck, knock out the head, perforate the sides, and then sink it in the excavation, when the sides of the pit will be prevented from falling

In, and thus a permanent well be established.

In this way I have seen a whole fleet watered in the Chesapeak, in the year 1813; this, too, on a long, flat, sandy peninsula, far removed from land of the slightest eminence. Nay, even in this way we filled our water-casks on the shore of a small flat Island in this magnificent arm of the sea.

I would here further suggest to those who may be compelled to abandon their vessel at sea, and take to their bosts on the wide ocean, when their little store of fresh water lails them, to take off their shirts and dip them in the sea, and then replace them, covering them-selves with their outer dry garments-if indeed they be The pores of the skin will then Imbibe the w to the exclusion of the salt particles; at least so I am informed, and, I believe, with reason. But let them resist, by all means, the temptation in agtremity, of drinking sea-water, which some in despair have resourted to. I need not say it only increases thirst; but I will add, that those who are thus driven to drink, die med, while those who have abstained have often been saved.

But while one poor sulor or soldier perishes for want of the water with which the clouds supply the earth, and of which, if he drink, he shall thirst again, " how many hundreds of my dear comrades in arms are drinking of solutions of my own continues in arms my writing as the thirst-orgating waters of worldly pleasures, and perialing everlastingly for lack of that "living water," of which "whosoever druketh shall never thirst," and which ineghaustible "FOUNTAIN" is within the gench

Spring, which ingigates the strile heart of man, and shall gush from the hard rocky heart of sinful man, and slake the thirst of his dying soul?

Perhaps some one who reads what I how write, may be led inwardly to say. "Give me this water, that I thirst not." On your knees, then, fellow-soldier, I implore you to seek it as earnestly me the cast-away matter would seek for water to assuage his burning thirst.

Wester that the assuage is assuage his burning thirst. Westry state—" he earnest in prayer"——" pray without couning," and rest assured that, through uneon channels, this "living water" will flow into your soul. Indeed, without it you cannot be samible of the innate depravity of your nature, which at the Day of Judgment musi cause your condemnation, if you have an advocate to plead for your commensation, it you have no accorate to pleas for you; more without it can you feel or "say that Jacus is the Load;" that He is your advocate, your Savrotta, who at that terrible day will cover you with the spotless robe of His righteousness; and unless you are enlisted under His bunners in this world, He is not your Captain—He will not your you hereafter.

He will not own you bereafter.

But perhaps the inquirer may ask, "What must I do to be saved?" The inspired word of Gon gives the suswer, "Believe in the Lown Jasus Cunist, and then BEALT be saved."

And further he may say, "What must I then do?"
"Keep the commandments." "Do violence to no man, neither accuse any felsely; and he content with your pay." Be not deterred, Fellow-soldier, by these requirements, because you feel that was cannot perform them.
The standard of Christian duties, 'tile true, is high; but your Bible will tell you that, 'If you really be a believer, you are promised supernatural aid—the aid of the Hotz Sprint to attain it. But mark Comrade, if you be not striving thus to live in the sight of a heart-searching God, you are still a servant of Satan, not a soldier of Change. And you know that "everlasting fire is prepared for the Devil and his servants."

If I have gained the ear of any Officers or private soldiers; if anything MATROSS has ever written, or now soldiers; if anything Marnoss has ever written, or now writes in the Gasette, has been, or may be, the honoured means of causing them to desire to "Search the Scriptures daily, to see whether those things (he has spoken of) be so;" I entreat them not to be deterred from their heavenward course by the fear of degision, or the silly cry of "Saint." And instead of Commanding Officers setting themselves against the "Enints," let them dispersionately obssider whether the folder who has the heavenly courage to obey his Gop; by abetaining from "rioting and drunkenness, chambaring and wantonness," and with meckness enduring the only of meeting the conand with meckness enduring the path of mosting the con-sequent averted faces, and curisd Rps of former friends, and hearing the ritbeld jeers, and bearing with the secra-ful looks of follow-soldiers—to consider, I say, whether such a one—one too who knows that "the Powers that be are ordained of Gop"—will be backward in obeying his superiors, even in the most trying occasions.

Sta,-Permit me to bring before the authorities and the public, through the medium of your excellent Publication, a case of great hardship as regards a most useful class of persons—the young candidates for appointments class of persons—the young candidates for appointments in the Medical Department of the Army. Numbers of those young men, most of whom have received a very superior education, remain three years on the books in St. James's Place, where it must be admitted the Director-General acts upon their cases with the greatest fairness and impertainty. After examination, and their having passed that severe order successfully; those young men are ordered to Chatham, to undergo a probation at the general hospital there, and semetimes remain three months before they are gazetted. During this time they do not receive one penny pay or allowance, and have to support themselves at great expense. At times such young surgain has 60 to 70 patients to attend to (at this moment I believe the average is eighty), and they are occupied from 8 o'clock s.m. until 5 p.m., and again at night. Now, Siz, I would suggest the justice of those young men who may be approved of, being allowed ranks and pay from the day of their commencing days at Chokhum, instead of the day they are actually geneted. Many of them are the some of old Officers with families, o have spent their all in educating those young men, who can very ill afford an extra expense of $56, or

Sin,—Chi you inform the by what patent, whirent, or authority, the buttations of Foot Charde are allowed to have shore than two stand of colours? By the King's Regulations (published in 37), it is isld down that "No regiment he henceforth to display a third stand of colours; any regiment now having a third dolour, as a mark in display the King deposed in abandon the claim, as being by the King deposed inadminible," &c. In spite of this, Sir, I was much surprised at litering the other day, that each battalion his more than the Gapen's and regimental colours, incomes as each Company has a separate colour to test I not in this all, for each company adopts for itself a cress, and which is unbroidered in the cause of this religious. It may be true enough that it reviews, parades, &c., but crest, and space is uncreased in the centre of this countries. Et may be true enough that at reviews, paradet, &c., but more than the regulated number appear, but at all guerns mountings, the evident that is used for that duty (constituted as the let of chief of all Military duties), is nothing the Queen's or regimental colour, but the third or Company's colour. By walting to the Colour yand, St. James's, two or these mornings successively, any person may convince biqueelf of the truth of the above manning. The Guards have many privileges I min sware tion. The Guards have many privileges I min sware. I do not easy them, or am I judicial of them; and I merely write the above to immain, whether there is any authority for a usage, which, to say the light of it, atrikes one as singular. There are, as you must well be aware, Sir, several regiments in the Service, that, before the regulation I have quoted above came into force, carried a third colour. I will, however, mention one in partialistic the 5th Pauliter—a regiment in every way distinguished, and which having in some action captured a stand of colours, was for many years allowed to carry it at their head. Unfortunately, however, a few years back at their head. at their head. Unfortnastely, however, a rew years back this cirious, as well as the sther two, was destroyed by five at Gibralter, and on the regiment obtaining the case, this third crimity (in spills of the atroog representations of the Governor of the Fort, the Commending Ufficer of the Regiment, and otherwise, was ordered to be discontinued, and some other privilege granted in its stead; Such being the case in one includes, the third in the regulations be enforced in a similar case in the Guarde, where, in be enforced is a similar case in the Guarde, where, in fact, there is not half the grandels for the privilege being granted as there was in the 5th Fusiliers? I beg marchly to did, that I am in this is a considered with any oblighed above-named regimentes or am I in any way projudited against the Guarde (as I first this many any projudited against the Guarde (as I first this many are). 73th Depot...

On Twendry evening Bagwell street was thrown into much confusion and excitement by three soldiers belonging to this depot, who kept shouting for Repeal, and making obeleance to a vast mon which followed them to the Gas-house liringer, and did not part from them until they returned to the barracks. One of the party, a very had character we understand, has been identified, and an investigation into the circumstances attending this pullitical exhibition was beid in the barrack on the following day, and the matter has been reported to Government. It is invariably a source of much pain to se to record anything calculated to refact on the humblest individual in the British Hervice, and it was with regret we witnessed the subsecoming exhibition on Tuesday evening; however, from all we can learn, the case is likely to be an isolated one, as the men of the 77th are generally well-behaved and soldier-like, and we hope that when we have to notice them again in any way, it will be in turns of approbation and praise...—Typerary Constitution.

THE BRITISH NAVY—PART AND PRESENT. Navan nines the Peace had then been allowed to re-

Nayan since the Peace had men been allowed to regelve penalous visits serving in the Navy. The regulation was made by the Tories, and instituted by them throughout their ising term of power. It served their purpose, however, to make this a ground of ancusation against the Whig Admiralty, who only maintained the rule which they found in force. When the present Covernment examin in, the Admiralty lost inciting in reversing what they themselves had established; but with so little educatements, that all pensioners were taking, and men were actually receiving, at one and the same time, pensions for incapacity, and able seamon's

The next instance is more serious. Since 1815 foreign Powers have built vessels of larger size than those by which the battles of the Nile and Trainigur were fought. An 86-gan ship is the smallest class of ships of the Line in the French Mavy. Our own Nevy was de-ficient in Large ships of two seeks. It is needless to country of comstant attention to the incre point out the ne point out the necessity of constant attention to the increase of the number of the larger class of war atempers. Both these subjects were carefully attended to by the late board. Severat 90 and 80-gen ships were in course of building. Could there be any doubt us to the success of bir W. Symonde's second rates?—for the Vanguard is by comsupmonds's spond rates for the Vanjuard is by common consent the finest two-decker in the Service. The present board, however, have altered all this arrangement; they have thought it more advantageous to frister away the whole atrength of our shipwrights in patching and pleeing old Tagus ships, which are nearly necless when duss, and will be retten before they can be wanted. They even took down part of the frame of a 98-gan ship, the Hunnidal, which had been put un one of the alips at Woolwich, and have since laid down the frame of a three-decker, in which class our Navy is particularly strong, and which is now about as far advanced as that of the Hunnidal was three years ago. In steemers they have in the same way wanted their strength in converting a bad frigate into a worse steamer, and in building trampery despatch bough, such as the one most appropriately christomed "The Dwarf," with about as mach pretraisions to use in war, as Tom Thumb to the title of General.

We do not mean, however, to review the conduct of the Admiralty. We will only remark, that whatever of numberoy there is in the Naxy, is due to the exertions of mon consent the finest two-decker in the Service.

We do not mean, however, to review the conduct of the Admiraty. We will only remark, that whatever of infinitency there is in the Nary, is due to the excitions of their predecessors. The Navy never was so reduced in all respects as by the Government of Sir R. Peel in 1855. Freis that these till 1881 It was gradually, but standily raised by the Whig Galvernhent. It was left by these strong in actual force—strong in acreptaing which gave the means of increase, if needed. Since 1941, in many respects, a distance of the for the haptovenest of the decknards, as in the works for the haptovenest of the decknards, the pregent Board have regionally carried on what had been platified and began by the previous Board. We have no reason to doubt that they have accretained the state of the stores. We have no with to without grade justly due, seed we too much designs those who, for many party purposes, depreciated the state of the Navy, is be tompted to imitate them.

But we have never referred to these matters. These were not the adoption the state of the Navy, in the residence.

By a long and possesses enumeration of owners the deal, of whatever descriptions, that is in the water. Well may the writer spotogias, mot to our neighbours for the apparent boast of our imperiority, but the Eaglish possible for supposing that they can be relied in past a typy. Things are indeed come to a practy pass, when attages the ships in commission he is reduced to include the graspi-ships of the ordinary; and amongst those on which wasts to rely for the defence of our coaling he reckess the paser hill; at Plymouth and at Portgrooth, and it Portgrooth, and it Portgrooth, and it is the training school in the river. Is this the yearly state of preparation of which his R. Feel besets?

We have never been forward to show apprehension or isolony in fewers. Powers, and we are under no alarm as to their straighting us; but it is our painful duty to comment upon the defenteless mate in which it has pleased the Government to leave our shares. It was upon this subject that public opinion was so clearly appreciated were alarmed at whose honesty no goubt could be suggested were alarmed at what they believed to be the unlyroteoted state of this country at that time. They were, indeed, mistakan as to the fact. Party spirit had misrepresented the truth; but their opinions as to what ought to be the state of the available Naivel facts at house is not imposeded by this mistake. They said, and truly, that it was not obmission with the honour of time interests of this country, if a Russian squadron, for instance, name late our seas, that no English ships of war should be fortispening; yet such is actually the state of the case at present. If half a dozen Russian ships anchored in the Downs to-morrow, a surveying vessel or a victualiting boy would represent We have never been forward to show approb a surveying vessel or a victualling hoy would represent the naval lorge of this country in the river. Is it any answer to this to snomerate such ships as that need as a anager to this to enumerate such ships as that used as a floating breakwater at Harwich; or the Mulgrave, a learnest o ship at Stangate Creek? Yet these vessels figure in the Admiralty list to prove Sir R. Peel's assertion of the efficiency of our wooden walls.

At Portamouth there is the Camperdown, sent round from the Nore; the Queen, which is under orders to be paid of; and the Callingwood, which ought to be half say to be anneshed station in the Pacific.

The St. Vincent, it seems, has been stopped at Ply-

The St. Vincent, it seems, has been stopped at Plymouth, and the great Naval demonstration under Sir E. Owen is reduced by a fourth part of its supposed force by her alternos. Our only frigate, the Volage, has not been sent away; and the Dicarf, the Bee, and the Dicart their station on our shores. Such is the force which our provident Government thinks adequate. We wonder what the "Flag Officer" and other alarmists of 1938 say to this? Will they remain silent? What says Lord Relville, who complained in 1839, and Lord Colchester, and Lord Ingestre? Are they less sensible to the swife which they so urgently pressed on the consideration of Parliament at that period? Or is it, indeed, true that they emigration of ouch opinions then, and true that they emirateled no such opinions then, and were abimated only by factious zeal for party purposes? We should be sorry to think so meanly of such men. But we must say that their allence gives sanction to such a belief; and another instance would be added to the utter dishonesty of conduct, when in opposition, of those utter dishonesty of conduct, when an opposition, or susse who are now in power.

We are glad to see strong symptoms of a more pacific spirit in the part of the pre-sit Government. We have always with that, in spite of their blustering, the interest of both countries in the maintenance of peace, is so strong as to render war very improbable; at the same time, when armed bodies of men or armed vesselv are in each other's neighbourhood, the age of one botheaded water an amendantal frate, may lead to most perious care stant's negocommon, the act of one not-negocomonic of an accidental fray, may lead to most serious consequences; and it is no justification of our Government to have so managed their forces, as to have had only one single line-of-battle ship in the Mediterranean, and so that a disposable force at home. No evil may many, but it will be to the good fortune of the country, and not to the windom or toreaght of its governors, that we shall be indebted for so happy a result.—Morning

THE PERINSULAR VETERANS. To the Editor of the Monal and Millery Gapette.

Sts.—I am so thereughly dispusted at the manuse in which the Officers of that glorious Peninsplat Army have been treated by an ungratural assion, that I am induced to make the following proposition to the neglected Veterans of the Peninsula. I now do this because I fear that all hopes of justice—cammon justice—teing done to them are at an end. Deeds unparalleled in England's Military history are forgotten—the surviving heroes who conquered a fee worthy of their valour in many a back-lought field, are refused by their country (skame on thee, England I) a medal to commemorate such deeds as have never been performed by any other Army in the world; and, as I heard a gallant friend of mine the other day remark, those heroes of a hundred fights live namerated by any distinction, save the wounds which they have rece from a fee worthy of their provess, and whom they, under their glorious chief, Wellington, always conquered. At ! Wellington, then greatest of sonquerers, I admire thee! I am proud of thee as a soldier, and I love thy fame so much, that I would give my left arm that thou hadet not bean ungrateful to that Army, which, with all thy great talents, made thes what thou art; for without such an Army, even thou couldet not have succeeded. And the surgivers of that glorious Army are now insulted by seeing boy addings decoursed for their puny lights in China and electrons, and set thou, Wellington, livest and art in power!! But manual, of this—to my proposition. I propose that the surviving Officers of the Peninsular should apply for permission to wear a Peninsular model to be furnished at their active pense.—but not to he worn unless pravious permission be obtained; the model to be of silver for either one or two campaigns, with the year or years of the campaigns on one side, and on the other the regt, and division in which the winter served; for three or four amanuality a gold model, and for five or more sampaigns a gold closes, provided that the Officer electrons to the set; and for the gold cross, in five; and that all Officers who have been actually present in six or more powered activities shall be entitled to the gold cross.

The ribben to he worn with these medicie to be exerted and stee equally divided. If such an application be made by the retrong Colleges of the Suninguin, I success thick it can be refused; said, feeling confident of your support in the business.

Troop Composal-Major if appointed daily as weekly to could be much more effectivelly readered by a permanent them his troop duties.

It frequently happened in the Franceule, that the moment a regiment arrived at its bivouse, it was arrived to send the greater part of its man to procure green forage; the Commissary leaving his store-keeper to delives the provisions, proposity with the Camponates for the former purpose, often to a distance of two miles.

Now, how useful wholed an experienced QuartermaeterSerjeant have been in this case, to assist in the delivery of provisions! of provisions!

The receipt and lines of arms, ammunition, clothing, camp equipment, repairs of madders, and a multisude of minor details, are constantly requiring the Quartermaster's attention, as well as the delty and almost hourly inspection and delivery of forage and provisions. Coursel writes as if all these duties were done by the Troop-Serjeausas if all these duties were done by the Troop-lierjeaut-Major, and that the Quartermaster was present merely as a cipher: I rather think he would had pretty inli employ-ment in doing justice to the different parties, both as to the "quantity and quality of the various articles." I can testify, from a very long experience, that the gitua-tion of a Quartermaster of Cavalry, whether at home or abroad, so far from being a appears, requires an unroulf-ting exertion, if that Officer Frince to do his duty with article of this I appeal to any and every old Cavalry Officer.

WE understand that upgraves of sixty Cadet appointments, consequent on the acrease of the Artillery at the agreeal establishments of India, which we exclusively announced in our Gazette of the 6th instant, are to be distributed amongst those candidates who can pass an examination that will be laid down by the Court of Directors.

In all other: Services the claims are duly pasidered of the sone of those deceased Officers who have at behind them a reputation acquired through long, see ous, and distinguished survices, and we appeal to the Directors of this blass India. THE arrival of the Governor General of India in Egypt, on his Overland Route, is an event not to be passed wit out notice. We have read with great interest that Sir Henry Hardings has had an interview with Mahomed Ali, and no doubt made that liberal-minded Prince sea the mutual benefits Egypt and England must derive from a close and friendly intercourse. The day cannot be far distant when the Mediterranean and Red Sea shall be united, if not by a cenel, by a railway, which may be said to units even sens together, almost as effectively as if the waters of one flowed into the other. We anticipate that; ere long, we shall have a convention with Egypt for the conveyence of our Regiments from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, and thence to India, thus enabling us to send in about two months, or six weeks on an emergency, a European force to our Empire in the East. Instead of conveying our Soldiers round the Cape at an enormous expense, our Regiments could, after a proper sessoning in the Mediterranean, be moved on to India, and vice versa, as required, when a railway has been completed, as we trust is now determined on. The visit of Sir Henry Hardings to the Pasha, we conceive, will do much good; and as the beginning of a friendly arrangement, for still greater facility and celerity of transit through Egypt, we cannot too highly estimate the wisdom of the Governor-General's laying the basis of the Negotiations for that object.

THE new plan of sending out the regiments to India from Cork and Liverpool is, on the whole, judicious: but we hope that a very rigid scrutiny may be instituted as to the ships to be taken up for the conveyance of the troops, and the provisions and stores for their long voyage. In general, we admit that the soldiers have been pretty well accommodated of late years, since they are not embarked in the Company's ships, in the orlop decks of which they used to be stowed away in dark and dense misery, in heat and rain, when with hatches closed the orlon decks were vapour-baths. We see that the vessels now tendered have the troops on the upper deck, where they have light and air, and can see to read and move about even in bad weather. The Officers are in these days less well accommodated in general; they are often stowed two in the same miserable dog-hole, called a cabin, being about eight feet by seven feet, or thereabouts. This, certainly for four or five months, is a wretched accommodation, and one which ought to be improved. The Bast India Company pay largely for each Officer-ninety-five pounds for the Subalterna and higher prices for the senior ranks. Assuredly for ninetyfive pounds each Subaltern ought to have a separate cabin. Were the voyage a short one-even of one month's duration-great inconvenience might be borne without complaint; but when the voyage is never less than four mouths, there quitt to be some better accommodation provided. For ninety-five pounds, we well know that a good single cabin can be procured in some of the best ships proceeding to India, and we never yet could understand why Officers with troops abould be crammed sogether, while often in the very same ship, Officers, se passengers, paying identically the same sum, should be provided with very superior cabins. This is a matter than ought to be inquired into. It is an abuse of long standing, but only needs a little exercise of authority in set right. Sir Thomas Willshire and Colonel Wears, at histhest, look into these matters. But three regiments flow gelling to India do not embark from that garrison.

We see not why good men, on paying off, should no have the option of remaining on fall poy, or on a refine scale, until their return from heave, instead of bidge allowed to wait in vain for ships; and althustely having to go away to the morehent service for the purpose of gaining a subsistence. WE have frequently alluded to the enormous size an weight of the pack carried by the Infantry of the Line. with the hope of directing attention to a reduction in both. While every exertion is made to reduce the weight carried by the Cavalry-and the recent order limiting the size of the men to be enlisted for Cavalry is the most important—the sole exertions made for the Infantry soldier have been in the mode of slinging the pack. Let any one examine the present knappack, with tin kettle, greatcoat, and its multiform straps, black and white buckles. and hooks, and then open it and see the many useless, or rather unnecessary articles it gentuins, and let us then ask. Cannot the weight and size be very much diminished Look at our infantry after a few years' service-look at the Cavalry after many years' service ! What a difference do they present ! Let us not be told that this difference is owing to the foreign service and the night dity of the Infantry. We all see the effects produced by carrying weights in civil occupations. Whenever Horse Geards institute inquiry or order experiments, we beg they may be made in the Line.

Now, let us ask what fairness, what justice is here shown to Medical Officers? Does it not sufficiently prove how humbly they are thought of? Are they not, let us ask, considered a grade that injustice may be done to with impunity?

But if, in the adove some, they derive no advantage from their comparative rank, see, as a set-off to the went of estimation this berrys for them, how highly, as to the payment of Fees for Designation, they are estimated, by being made to pay at a higher rate than even the first Officers of the Staff stithe Morse Guards ! The convict Dalmas has been removed to Millband

The convict Dalmas has been removed to Millback prison, preparatory to his being trensported for life. The public wind is somewhat uneasy at the course pursued by the Escentive with regard to this man, who was convicted at the Old Bailey, in June, of the murder of Mrs. M. Farlane. It is not uneasy because the man is spared, but because it is not informed soly he is spured. All that the public known is this :....That Dalmas was triad before the thing of the Milliams. puone knows is this :-- That Dulmes was tried before two judges, Mr. Baron Gurney and Mr. Justice Williams and defended to and defended by an able advocate; that his sale defend and defended by an able advocate; that his sole assence was, that he was not the man who committed the murder; that the jury, after deliberating four hours and a helf, returned a verdict of guilty; that the judge appreced himself satisfied with the verdict, and paged settlemes on the convict, giving him no hope that his its would be spared. This occurred in a public court; this the form e public knows. It also knows that the consist is not hanged. We have been informed that it is not upon the ground of his being knouse that the life of Dalmas i spared. What is the ground, we sak, upon which the Home Secretary has recommended the commutation of punishment from death to transportation for life? the life of Dalmas has been spared, we cannot imagine any circumstances under which capital punishment can be carried into effect. The Years of a Home of Commons.—A young horse, wild and skittish at first, is put into the hands of the breaker, and gradually, as it grows olden, becomes docile and treatable under its mesher's guidance. But a young Parlament is of exactly as appoints nature. It exhibits all its docility, and liferally is exposite nature. It exhibits all its docility, and liferally is without trick and rise in its sully years. This is the golden uge, the Saluraia regno, in which Ministers is Saluraia so much delight. Analyse the thing. As the remain of age own observation, we should say, that fortile the first years after a general election, the majority withe Hones of Commons are as submissive as so many pagraces and coolles to the voice of sphanissive as so many negroes and coolles to the voice of their leader. They seem for such a period to be totally dependent upon him; to live only to do his will, and for dependent upon him; to live only to do use wise, and sor such a portion of the lower and suchs as he may choose to deat among them. In the third year, however, they avisce symptoms of a more refrectory and ungovernable spirit. Many of them by this time have not with sitting political or personal disappointments at the hands of the Minister. With regard to the one point, they have found out that the imaginary good of their devo-tions was only a fallible man like themselves. With re-ference to the other, either they have been able to get remove war way a remove man mee insured. With foreignee to the other, either they have been alighter as nothing in the greens argueble, or nothing again to their hopes and experiations. Murmurs of deconfight, therefore, hegin to be legicle on the banches which if was peace and acquisesous helians. Blackness which if year ago would have been toward with mean manual met. and acquirescence instage. Measures which again ago would have been passed with acclamation, now proceed with eitentio, ar, it may be, are questioned, opposed, thrown out. In short, the estaton now expiring, being the third year's session of the peasons Parliament, will thoroughly itinestrate our opinious of the duings of a House of Compose in this era of its existence. But let us present mose in this era of its existence. But let us present mose in the foture, as well as thought of the present and the post, then haple to flit before the single of Members of Parliament. FRANCE AND MOROCCO.—The following are the details of an engagement which took place on the 3d instant, between the Freuch and the Moors :-- tween the Freuch and the Moors:

Marshal Eugeaud to the Prince de Joinville.

"Rivouso upon the Trued-laiy, near its mouth, in the Oned-Monlish, July 5.—Monseigneur—In my letter of the lat of July, I informed you that I was advancing on the Upper Monlish, in order to protect the return of a large portion of the Augades, whose chief like come to my camp the preceding evening to make terms for his aubmission and his return. The bank of the river on which I am encamped the name of Oued-laiy.

"The Morneco Chief, who was encamped two leagues distant, came to meet me, and established himself at a distance of two cannon shot, in a manner which appeared ambiguous. During the day some Light Infantry of the enemy's force fired upon may advanced posts. Their five was not returned. Some Cavaly belonging to our Augades having approached the camp, I ment some of our Argha to apeak with them, to haw if the movement agreed upon was about to take place. They were found to be arrogant boasters. They said that the Morocco Chief, having been interwed of their relations with us, had confined the tribe to the mountains.

sgreed upon was about to take planes. Two wave seems to see arrogant boasters. They and that the Morocco Chief, heving been informed of their relations with us, had confined the tribe to the mountains.

"They added that whether we retired or whether we advanced there would be a buttle on the following day, that the Morocco Army had received a reinforcement of 1820 Cevelry under the orders of the Sherif Mamoun, and 1820 infantry, commanded by Hamida, the former Kaid of Guchds, and that if we were congevered they would gubnit. I had no intrahidou of advancing.

"This morning at an early hour I retired in good order of battle prepared to resist Cavalry. The enemy's light Infantry immediately dred upon my Rear-guard. Their light Cavalry were ancessively reinforced, and soon formed the six of a large effects which embraced a part of my column from right to left. The main force of the enemy advanced doubly, and did not happear defermined to fight. They wished, as if appeared, is necessionly se without any serious engagement, which they would have acleurated as a victory.

"When I helted the enemy balted likewise. This was repeated during a league and a half. Not mishing to give the Moure a mornil with their co-religionsite, I determined on shifts the affector, and soon of the shifts of the promoter with their co-religionsite, in the time of the shifts of the norman.

"They evinced no audacity; everyhody remarked that they were less boild than in the two first encounters. Some of our charge hour them. On our reaching the cases, which I had left in the marking, it was repeated their infantry had been seen to refer at any development of the infantry. That of the superior number was no longer to be apprehended. Nevertheless I supported during along the left bank of the Ouet-Lely. I this sub-hecitale then to order out my Cavalry. Richard III. as Duke of Glovesser and King of Ragiand. By Carpline A. Halsted, author of the "Life of Margaret Beaufort," and "Obligations to the Mothers of England." 2 vols. 8vo.

Longman and Co.

HAD we the requisite time and space, it would afford us infinite pleasure to render justice to these two eminently interesting and important volumes. To the cause of history and biography, Miss Halsted had already done good service by her excellent "Life of Margaret Beaufort," Personally, too, she has strong claims on the notice of the British public, as the niece of two of our distinguished Admirals, the late Sir Laurence Halated and Lord Ex-mouth, and as a relation of the late Lord Sidmouth.

Years ago, Horace Walpole, by his "Historic Doubts Years ago, Horace Walpole, by his "Historic Doubts of the Life and Reign of Richard III.," produced no slight sensation in the literary world. So strong, however, was the general projudice against the person, character, and conduct of Richard—a prejudice first excited by the ancient Chroniclers, sustained by their followers, heightened to enthusiasm by the commanding genius of Shakspeare—that the work made no enduring impres-aion on the public mind. Hume is said to have spoken Walpobe exclaimed, that, very unjustly; and in return, Walpobe exclaimed, that, were it worth the trouble, he could shake every page of Hume's England to rags. Indeed, to effect this, would require no super-human exertion; for, of all the historians of modern times, Hume is least entitled to the credit of research or verscity. But since the days of Walpole, many literary discoveries have been made, and much documentary evidence has been brought to light in favour of Richard III. Of these discoveries so light in favour of Richard III. Of these discoveries—of this evidence—Miss Halated has industriously and successfully availed herself; and it is not adventuring too far to eay, that asuch of what Walpole left doubtful, his successor has reduced to certainty in favour of the hero of Bosworth. Richard no longer revour or the hero of Bosworth. Richard no longer stands prominently forward as a regicide and a tyrent—as an undatabul and cruel brother—as the heartless destroyer of his wife. On the contrary, most of the heavy charges which have been brought against him—his want of affection towards his mother—his heartless towards his wife, Lady Anne his distance. his disloyalty towards his wife, Ledy Anne—his disloyalty towards his brother Edward—the death of the Dake of Clarence—the murder of his nephews in the Tower, acc—are shown to be unsupported by any gradible evidence. Those charges arose—naturally, perhaps, but unjustly—from the circumstances of the first—from Richard's fall—from the triumph and catablishment of his successor on the throne whom the writers of the day, such as they were. triumph and establishment of his successor on the throne—to whom the writers of the day, such as they were, were ready to office, their veint praise and addation. The press was not then what it is now. Had Richard been victor at Bosmorch, how differently would his actions and character have been partrayed in the page of history. Instead of "the cropk'd back tyrant," buse and deformed in mind as in person, he would have been presented to "a successful proper man," endersed with all the leftlest virtues of our maters.

As a frontispiece to the first volume is given a striking portrait of King Richard, from an original in the posses second volume is profixed a plate of whole-length por-traitures, in outline, of Richard III., his Queen, and the Prince of Wales, their son; copied from a MS. in the College of Arms.

We cannot too warmly recommend Mine Halated's publication, which is in all respects a library book.

Newby.

APTER Dickens's "Bernaby Rudge," it was rather a bold undertaking to construct a tale upon the Gordon Riots. However, the author has contrived to bring to-gether a mass of telerably adhesive material, in the disposition of which he has evinced more tact, and excited greater interest than we had expected. A love story, a duel, an abduction, and a variety of other peferious signs, are mixed up in a constantly bustling manner, with the burning of Langdale, the dutiller's hope, in Holbern; the destruction of Lord Mansfields, in Bloomsety the destruction of Lord Mansfields. Square; the sensule spon Newgate, &c. ; and, so far as the dramatic persons are concerned, poetical justice is pretty satisfactorily awarded at the close. In the progress of the story, however, some singularly ludiore nisms occur. For fustance, we never heard of gentlemen wearing moustach es in the days of Lord George Gordon and where, in the year 1760, did Walter Clayton find the "severeign" which he dropped into the old woman's hand? And in what lossilty, we should like to know, was the "Regent Street," in which comebody changed a handred posi ed mete, at the same period?

THE COMPANY'S NATIVE SHOOPS. BY CAPTAIN DIVERSE.

Or all the extraordinary political phenomena of su-cient or modern times, what is there to be compared to the British position in Asia, where a vast empire, comprising eighty millions of inhabitation is held in ambjection by n large Native Army, swayed and directed by a handful of Europeans differing from the men they command total owlo ! But our aituation in the East, thruth unique and anomalous in the highest degree, is no less prematious. There our power stands, as it were, on the point of a needle, and a day or an hour may bring about a change that may prove fatal to our supremacy. One thing, howthat may prove fittal to our supremacy. One thing, however, would appear certain: and this, I denseive, is a view of the question in which all Objections sained but concur, that India has been intrusted to the core of Britain for some great and good end, and that the surest and safest every of retaining our novereignty over it is to do the country fustion, and that in the most enlarged and liberal sense of the word. It has been long outsteady to speak of our Indian empire as one of opinion; but it can hardly be considered purely such, for the award has certainly a good deed to do with the matter; and whatever considered the people may have in British integrity and good fath, the contract of the faith, there can be little doubt that dur hower in that country is at present maintained as much by fear as by love. And now let us take a survey of the scantilution of love. And new let us take a survey of the scartitution of the Native Army of India, as the most important instrument of our rule.

The Native portion of the Indian Army (and nearly four-fifths of the whole are composed of Natives) cannot at present be under 200,000 men, Cavilley, Inflatty, and Artillery; and this vast body, with the exception of a few local and irregular corps (the latter of which are educirably efficient for the desultory wariare so frequent in the East), is drilled, dressed, disciplined, and Officered, with some few trivial modifications, upon the European model and a wonderful sight it is to witness the movement of and a wondertus again it is to witness the important of our Natire through on the parade ground, and the alsority and precision with which they go through the made intricate manchevers. Indeed, when we consider the raw material of which this large martial body is composed, the thing about him, and bespoke the British ...... He were a cross-belt, and was armed with a musket and bayonet, and his Military education, in the first instance, was limited to the manual and plateon exercise, and a few of the simplest evolutions; but subbon se edvantages he soon proved his infinite superio. Autopail auddisciplined oon proved his infinite superio. Autora 1 undisciplined countrymen against whom he was leaded history new records numberless brilliant schievements of our gallant Sepays under the auspices of British Officers. Supply, however, has gradually progressed in discipline and dress, and at the present day it is only in a few frivial points that he differs from Europeans, with whom, upon the parade ground, in all that regards drill and Martial exercise, as well as in other respects, he is all but on an equality, excepting, perhaps, that in marching the British sudder moves with more steadiness. Extraordinary as it may appear, the words of command to due Native tromps are given in English, though of course there are corresponding words of hommand. in Hindostanes, &c., which are occasionally had recourse to.

In the infancy of the Native Army the Supoys were formed into what were then formed independent comjeant, who, doubtless, must have had a song berth of it; there were, besides, a Subadar or Native Captain, and w Jemadar or Native Lieutenaut. In the year 1748 Major (afterwards Major-General), Lawrence arrived from I land with a special commission to command all the Bast India Company's forces in Ladia, baving been transferred direct force the Bastle the direct from the Royal to the Company's Service—a messwa in those early days of frequent occurrence. Medicas was then the most important of the Company's settlements, and Lawrence's first alm was to organise the troops of and Lawrence's first aim was to organize the troops or that presidency, by forming the different independent com-panies into regular battalions. Originally there were but two European Officers to each Native corps, busides a Serjeant to each company; there were a Captain Com-mendant and an Adjutant; besides a Subadar applications to each company. A Native Commandant was also at-tacked to each battalion, and in those days he often postached to each battalion, and in those days he often posheased an influence nearly equal to the European Commandator; from whom he received a proportionate degree of regired and respect. As a convincing proof of this fact, St. John.
Malcolm tells us, in his Political History of Invite, page 491, that many of the addest battalions of the opent Arms were known at the period by wrete (1811) by the minimum of their former Native Commandants—a commissional

"There are great force and upparent truth in Miss Halted's energetic vindication of Richard. Among the many advantages these inventions possess are, the unering power in the Patent Gun of Self priming, without any machinery ar risk of geltlag out of order; the Double-barrel Gun priming 150 times associately by self action; perfect safety to the priming 150 times associately by self action; prefect safety to the exp or primer flying to pieces, and its entire protection from wat or damp; great additional strongth in the developing of the gun, and the impossibility of its intelsion or, henging fire. In addition to which, all guns on this principle stay, by any person (if desired) in a few accounds be altered, and set as the ordinary Copper Cap Gun, and again as quickly researed to the Patent principle without any difficulty whatever.

GUNS.—LONDON MADE GUNS.—
Hitherto there has been no certain way of obtaioline a good gun without paying an extravagant price. Guns sold at low prices have been made those with whom quality has not been to much a consideration at the production of a showy chosp article, which has generally growed worthless, if not daugerous. This has led RIPPIN & BURTON to engage persons of known ability and great experience to the manufacture of gons, and they now solicit aportament to quapact their extensive assortment.

NICKEL ELECTRO-PLATED. The Real NICKEL BILVER, introduced and made only by RIPPON & BUETON, which has been so deservedly calebrated during the last two years for its entreme purity, its slivery whiteness, and in surability, when plated by the patent process of Messre, Silvington & Co., is beyond all comparison the very best article, next to steriling silver, that can be employed as such, ofther usefully or ornamentally. In the lengthened and increasing popularity of the material itself, and the high character of the method of plating, the public have a guarantee that the articles and by Rippon & Burton (and by them only) are, as it regards wear, immeasurably superior to what can be supplied by any other house, while by un possible test can they be distinguished from real silver.

18 abipe. THE SURVEYOR OF THE NAVY AND MIS SHIPS. There is no public Officer who, in his official capacity, has been more aspersed than Sir William Symonds, and yet there is no one who has rendered greater service to the country in the improvement of the Nevy than, he has. Few, however, if any, of his detractors are to be found rew, nowever, it any, or his cartactors are to be rotate among nautical men, because all who have ever salled in his ships are aware of their superior quality in point of speed and stability, and the much greater accommodation they afford to both Officers and men over the old vessels of the same class. Bir W. Symonds, in doing away with a uscless but expensive establishment at Portessouth, brought a hornet's nest about his ears, since which, when any of his vossels, no matter of what clear, have been leauched, they have Mways been pronounced to be full of faults... The best practical refutation that can be given to the aspersions against Sir W. Symonds and the Assistant-Barreyor, Mr. Rdys, is the fact that no less than from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and fifty vessels now on the Navy List have been constructed, or are in the now on the rawy that have been constructed, or are in the course of construction, by this present Surveyor. Many of these vessels have been at sen for yours, and their capabilities have been repeatedly and fally tested; and if the official reports furnished by their respective Captains were not of the most favourable character, the Lords of the Admirstly would not continue to build others upon the omidal reports turnished by their respective Captaine were not of the most favourable character, the Lords of the Admiralty would not contifiue to build others upon the same plan. The following is the list of the vessels that have been built, or are being built, by Sir W. Symonds:

Of the lime of histile ships, the Quego, Albien, and Proposerd have already hase at sea, and their characters are fully established. The Collingmond, which is now all attent at Portunenth, is of the scale class as the Vergenerd, and has been substited by Sir Groupe Seymour as his Filip-ship. She is one of the best specimens of the Serveyor's productions; and the gallent Admirel and all the Officers who have visited her consider her to be some at the most perfect ships in the Service here to be some at the most perfect ships in the Service have yet and there is no doubt that her suspening qualities will prove of the mome high character as those of the Verguerel and Queen. It is not only in the superiority of the Serveyor's ships that the country is benefited, but also in the great saving that is effected in building them as compared with the roat of former ships, as will be even from the fellowing estimate: as compared with the cost of for from the following estimate:

This is three sail-of-the-line and three frigutes less than This is three sail-of-the-line and three rightees rose than at the legimling of the year; the steamers are the same in number; the sleope are three in eddition; and the amaller vessels are also increased by three; the number of guns is 248 less; and consequently the seamen are decreased by 3000 men. It is quite clear, that consentof the line in the Mediterraneen, and four at home, are not a sufficiently disposable force to guard against audden demonstrations, from whatever quarter they may apring: at least three sail-of-the-line more should be fully manned and equipped, and their crews (leaving 220 in each ship), may be usefully employed in frigates and sloops, cruising on the Irish and Scotch coasts and the English channel. Although much may be said on the score of expense attendant on too large a defensive force, yet to agreeter expense than at present we ought to be pre-pared. We cannot but think with Lord Minto that we should have sent ships to Gibraltar the moment the French talked of sending some to Tanglers; it would have been no expense to do so, as the men will cost no more then they do in barracks or in Portamouth

The Systemann st.-v., Lieut.-Com. D. Mapieton, arrived at Gibrahur from Devoaport and Tangise, on 9th finst., and immediately sailed from that port to Barcalom with dispatches for the Ambuseador, and was to proceed thence to Malta, with instructions to Vice-Adm. Sir E. Owen, the Com.-in-Chief. Bir E. Owen, in the Formidable, 84, with the Aigis, 26, Capt. Lord Paget, were on their passage from Malta, and the Systeman met the Admiral at Barcelona. By this time he will have arrived at Gibrahur, and the Alicon, 90, Capt. N. Leokyer, C. B., and the Calcabola, 120, Capt. A. Milne, will not be far distant. The Fox, 42, Capt. Sir H. M. Blackwood, will also be there in a few days, so that we shall have three of distant. The store, as, Capt. Ser it. Mr. Biscusson, was also be there in a few days, so that we shall have three of the finest line-of-battle ships, two heavy fitgates, a 26-gun frigate, and a few stansars, fully manned and equipped, and able, as Sir G. Coukburn stated, to take their part, and able, as Sir G. Cockburn stated, to take their part, whether they meet friend or foe.

H.M.S. Madagascar, Capt. John Foote, which arrived in the Bound on Friday week, after 20 days' passage from Buona Veeta, was inspected on Mouday last by Admiral Sir David Milne, G.C.B., Commander-in-Chief at this port, and proceeded up the Harbour the same evening to prepare for paying off. She was commissioned on 12th August, 1842, and will likely be paid off next Thursday. She has been the senter Officer's skip on the west coast of Africa for 24 years, and was relieved by the steam frigate Prescions: during which paylod she captured ning slaft. Penotope; during which period she captured nine slave-vessels and liberated 1100 slaves.

CAPTAIN WARNER'S EXPERIMENT AT BRIGHTON CAPTAIN WARNEN'S EXPERIMENT AN BRIGHTON.

On listurday this invention, of what Captain Warner describes as a new destructive power, was subjected for the first time to the test of a public asperiment. Its effect had been tried be one on two eccasions, but on a much smaller scale, and only before select parties, consisting principally of scientific and official persons; and as the requisits scorecy respecting the nature of the power did not admit of any very specific statement or description, the public generally were only partially informed as to its operation or scheet, and of course took proportionately little interest in it. Considerable negotiation took place between Captain Warner or his immediate friends and the Government, with a view of inspectation took place between Copysin warner or his immediate friends and the Government, with a ziew of afferding a fair trial of the extraording power on a large scale, that is, in the open sen, and directed against a ship of war, or some similar larger and strongly timbered vessel, but after a long time had elapsed, thus negotiation had not yet arrived at any astisfactory conclusion, and at length it appeared improbable that any opportunity would be speedily afforded of testing a power, which, if successful to the extent that its originator anticipated, would, as we have already stated, change the charactes of warfare altogether. At this period Mr. Somes, the eminent chipowner, being desirous that no further time should be lost in setting the question at rest by actual experiment, offered one of his vessels, the John o'Caunt. a back of about 400 tons burthen, to be subjected to the discharge of the explosive power. Mr. Somes, with the characteristic liberality of a Bristish merchant, did not select a thoroughly unseaworthy vessel for the purpose, the John o' (iauni being, although an old vessel, strong and fit for sen, a proof of which is to be found in the fact that Mr. Somes was offered 1900/, for the yearel only a few days before he devoted her to destruction for the patriotic and sulightened purpose of testing, so far as it went, a discovery which promised to be of great national importance.

It was evident, from the great number of distinguished individuals who arrived in Brighton early on Saturday last, that considerable interest was felt in the result of the operations, and as the day advanced, the rapidly increasing crowds, compying every position from which a good sea view could be obtained, afforded a striking indication of the curiosity which all classes felt in the issue of the experiment. At three o'clock the Steyne presented an appearance of animation and exciting interest, such as had seldom been witnessed at Brighton. Every eye was turned seaward, and almost every other topic was forgotten in the general anxiety for the moment when it should be pulpably demonstrated whether, however successful the destructive force might be on a small scale, it would prove equally destructive to a large and strong ship in the open sea. In consequence of the vague, and at the same time, unqualified description of the power of this tremendous agent, which had been given by its projector, there was a general and rather con-fident impression that it would fail, or be, at all events, but partially successful. However, the cool practical preparations for bringing into effect the proposed destrucion of the vessel, were rather atrong proofs of how certain Capt. Warner was of success, but, notwithstanding, there was a great deal of doubt and incredulity evinced by those assembled. Amongst the more distinguished persons present were—The Marquess of Exeter, the Marquess of Lorn, Earl Manvers, Lord Brougham Wiscount Combermore, Viscount Ingestre, M.P., Viscount Aford, Viscount Reneligh, Lord Lovaine, Lord Southampton, Lord J. Beresford, Lord Hungerford, Lord Tadouster, Mr. J. Whichoute, Hon. H. Fitzroy, M.P., Hon. W. Cowper, M.P., Capt. Boldero, M.P., Mr. E. Tennest, M.P., Mr. R. Yorke, M.P., Mr. W. Peel, Mr. Muckinnon, M.P., Hon. Capt. Murray, R.N., Capt. Henderson, R.N., Capt. Dickinson, R.N. Col. Dundas, Capt. R. Marton, Mr. Somes, Mr. Walesby Mr. Lindsay, M.P., Mf. Neville, M.P., the Chevalies Benkhausen, Russian Consul, Hon. L. Pierrepoint, Col. Chalmers, R.N., Capt. Coffin, R.N., Gen. Upton, Mr. H. Cole, M.P., Capt. Stevens, R.N., &c., &c. At lour o'clock the Nir William Wallace and Tees steamboats got under weigh, and proceeded to the vessel for the purpose of getting away the anchor and cables, and making fast a hawser, in order to tow the vessel off Brighton, but considerable delay occurred in effecting this, caused principally by a fresh breeze, and it was not till five o'clock that the crew on board the bark alipped her cables, when by the aid of powerful telescopes, she was seen to move, being taken in tow by the Nir William Wallace, and expectation was now more than ever excited. There was a fresh breeze from the south-west, but the bark had no sails set, although they were bent, and a strong current running sgainst the vessel, she moved slowly towards Brighton, followed by the Ters, a small Shoreham steamer, engaged for the purpose of assisting to tow the vessel in case the weather became very rough, and in order to take away the boat when the two men who remained to steer the back fluidly left her. Captain War-ner was on board the steamer which had the John o Gauni in tow, and it was arranged that he should make a signal when he was rendy to commence operations. It was near six o'clock when the ship arrived off the battery, at which were stationed Lord Ingestrie, and Captains Henderson and Dickinson, who were to make a signal when they wished the operations to be directed against the vessel. At about twelve minutes to six o'clock, Captain Warner made his signal that he was ready, the John o' Gaund being then about 500 yards from the steamer in which Capt. Warner was stationed, and still attached by a tow In a few minutes subsequently, the union jack on the flag staff at the battery was lowered as a signal that it was time to commence operations, but this was answered by the steam-boat hoisting her jack half most high, to indicate that an unavoidable cause of delay existed. This was a cuttor, whose crew, in order to watch the pro-ceedings, sailed so close to the bark's quarter, that Capt. Warner feared that if he directed his power against the vessel whilst the outter was so near, the lives of those on board the cutter would be exposed to great danger. The public anxiety was now at its height, and the crowds on the beach not knowing the cause of the de-lay, were more doubtful than ever of the auccess of the experiment. Those who were foremost in maintaining the powerlessness of the noiseless and invisible agent to destroy so powerful a fabric new triumphed in the and numbers becoming fatigued, began to think of re-turning to London by the train, which was soon to start. The cutter, in the meantime, hauled her wind, and got off to a considerable distance from the ship, which was about a mile distant from the shore, and Capt. Warner let down his flag to indicate that he was ready to commence. This was not understood by the people on shore, and consequently attention was not generally revived by it, but suddenly, and with the qu ners of lightning, a brown murky cloud surrounded the ship, and, unaccompanied by any noise except the dell crashing of riven timbers, sent up from its bosom high into the air, the mainmast and all its attached spars splintered into fragments, and falling in a shower of dicbris around the vessel on all sides, but principally about. The cloud was immediately blown away by the strong breeze, and the ship was seen lurching so heavily to port, that persons on shore could see through the hatchway that a large portion of her starboard side was blown away, the principal direction of the force having taken effect under the main chains; her mizen-meat also had broken short off a few feet from the top, but the foremast, foretopmast, and foretop-gallantmast still re-mained, the foremast being held by the forestay, which withstood the shock that destroyed all the other standing withstood the snock that destroyed all the other standing rigging. In a moment after the lurch she righted, and settled down rapidly for a few seconds, and then, again hesling over to port, she sunk in five fathoms water exactly in two minutes and a half after she had received the stroke of this strange and unaccountable force, and the tall ship, which a few minutes before floated so proudly on the waters, was now lying at the bottom, a shattered wreck. Up to this time astonishment had held people nearly mute; but as soon as the vessel had sunk under the waves, three thundering cheers were given for Capt. Warner. Nothing could be imagined more striking than the sudden, noiscless, and complete destruction of the It inspired a feeling almost of horror, occurring as it did without any of those concomitant incidents which usually are the accompaniment of a destructive explosion. No shell was thrown—nothing was estensibly propelled from the steam boat—ne human agency appeared to be engaged against the vessel, and yet she crumbled to pieces more quickly than if struck by the whole broadside of a man-of-war.

So far as we have described the operation, the destructive efficacy of such a power is appalling to contemplate, if directed against a ship with hundreds of men on board, operating as it does invisibly, silently, and rapidly. It is right to state that the experiment of Saturday was in order to show the portion of the invention which may be applied at sea, imitte blockade of towns, or defence of places from at sea, ignie blockage of towns, or ference or places rous attack by sea. There is another application of the power, which is intended for a long range in the destruction of forts and places of strength. The question between the Government and Captain Warner, we have discussed in our leading columns.

EXPLOSIVE PORCES.

THE experiment so successfully performed off Brighton by Captain Warner having publicly demonstrated the destructive action of the secret power which he has under his control, it may be interesting to examine the nature of known explosive forces, and to investigate the principles on which their effects depend. In pursuing investi-gations of this kind, however, much uncertainty prevails, arising from the difficulty and danger of experimenting with explusive compounds, the emergy of which is suddenly excited, and depends in a great degree on the intensity of the action.

The explosive force of guspowder, it has been well ascertained, depends on the sudden generation of an elastic gas from the fired powder. The quantity of gas generated from a given quantity of guspowder may be measured with tolerable accuracy; therefore it might be appropriated that its application from each he according to the property of the property in the control of the cont generated from a given quantity of gunpowder may be measured with tolerable accuracy; therefore it might be approach that its explanive force could be ascertained with equal certainty. But independently of the gas generated, the expansion of the gas at the instant of its generated, the expansion of the gas at the instant of its generated and the greatest variations of opinion have this estimate the greatest variations of opinion have caused among "good authorities." It has been ascertained by chreful experiments that the quantity of gas generated on firing the genpowder manufactured at the Government mills, occupies 244 times the space of the produces, her examplesive agains; but from the experiment to the experiment wills, one cubic inch of gunpowder produces at the procusive effects of fallatinating mercury, powder; that is, one cubic inch of gunpowder produces at the procusive effects of fallatinating mercury, would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch, it would be compressed within a space of one cubic inch as the provision instantiation of the provision with the provision into displayed on the provisio of a red hot fire, the gas would be expanded from 244 cubic inches into 1600, and the pressure at the instant of firing would be equal to air tone on the aquare lach. The degree of heat must depend materially on the quantity fired, and so great have been the differences of scientific men in their estimates of the force of gunpowder, that whilst Mr. Robius estimated it at 1000 atmospheres, Dr. Hutton calculated it at 2000, and the celebrated Count sates as high as 54,000 atmo-Rumford carried his esti-Runford carried his estimates as high as 34,000 atmospheres. We believe that the aslimate of Dr. Hatton how considered to be nearly correct, that the explosive force of guspowder when fired is equal to a force of 2000 atmospheres, exerted within the space occupied by the

Prodigious as this power of gunpowder seems, it is not greater than that exerted by an equal quantity of water when converted into steam. One rubic inch of fired water would generate ateam aufficient to produce an equal amount of steady pressure. The greater destructive effects of the gunpowder depends not on the greater amount of actual force exerted, but on the greater rapidity of its action. The difference in this respect is similar to that between pressure and percussion; a piece of glass may bear a pressure of tons, yet be shattered to pieces by a smart blow of not greater force than a few

The intensity of action produces | more |destructive effects than absolute amount of power. It is on this principle we may account for the destructive effects of fulminating mixtures, and other inflammable compounds. In the course of some experiments we instituted for the purpose of ascertaining the propulsive effort of an ex-plosive mixture of oxygen and hydrogen gases, we accorinited that under the most favourable circumstances the force generated did not exceed ten atmospheres, yet, judging from the minute particles into which glass shattered by its explosive action, we are induced to be-lieve that the intensity of the force must be greater than

The loud report made by most fulminating compounds shows that the intensity of their action must far suspans that of guipowder. The cause of the report is the sudden displacement of the air by the gas generated during inflammation of the compounds. This is so rapid that the gaves produced by the rapid chemical union of the clements of the aubstance strikes the air with as inuch violence as does guapowder when rammed into a cannon, The vast difference in the efforts exerted by gunpowder and by futminating mixtures is evidenced by firing them when unconfined. An ounce of gunpowder will scarcely make any report, whilst a few grains of fulminating aliver gives a report like a pistol. The effects of auch fulminating mixtures show also the far greater intensity of their efforts. When gunpowder is fired unconfined, a large quantity is required to produce any effect. It was the practice during the recent war in India for our soldiers to blow open the gates of towns by firing bags of gunpowder, but nothing less than many pounds could generate sufficient explosive force. The effect in such cases must be produced by the reaction of the air, for the explosive force would be dissipated in the atmosphere if its action were not so great and so sudden as to meet with resistance from not no great ann so sauten as to meet was reassance from the air, which constitutes the point apput whereon the force acts in the opposite direction. When unconfined fulminating mercury is exploded it obtains this point-a apput on the air by the greater intensity of its action, when the quantities are grains instead of pounds. It is for this reason that the effort of fulminating mercury is observed to be directed downwards when fired on a table. The resistance of the air above serves as its point-d'appui, and enables it to penetrate into the substance of the resisting body underneath.

A much more formidable compound than the fuls A much more formidable compound than the fulningting preparations of the metals is the chlorids of nitrogen, which was discovered in 1812 by M. Dulong, the French chemits, and its nature was investigated by the late Sir Humphrey Davy. This substance is an oily liquid, and the most minute drop apploaded on the point of a knife will chatter the blade to fregments with a loud report. Its effects were recently exhibited by Frofessor Faraday during a lecture at the Royal Institution, when a very small drop on the centre of a plate was exploded, and broke the porcelain into pieces. This genpenment explodes on the alightest concussion; by throwing a drop into citys till, or by touching it with phosphorus, an ex-presented any experiments of the kind fries being made. It is not, therefore, so much the amaginude of the force exerted as the mode of eafly controlling it in which the magit of Capt. Warner's invention depends. Forces for more destructive than gunpowder have been long known, but they have remained useless from the difficulty of their application. If Capt. Warner has overcome this difficulty, even supposing the force employed not to be now, he will have succeeded as effectually in changing the art of war as did the inventor of gunpowder.—Morning Post.

Sth Dragoons—A most entraordinary and perhaps un-precedented circumstance took place with this regiment on Souday lest, the Sist inst. The regiment peraded for Divine Service at the usual time, and murched to the New Church, where most is amind that murched to the New Church, where, upon its arrival, they were uset at the door by an old men with a long red in his hand (a person who candacts strangers to pews), and who informed the Commending Officer that they could not get admittance, he at the same time alleging as a reason that a collection was to be made in sid of same named institution of the terms. to be made in sid of some named institution of the town to be made in sid of some named institution of the town, and that as a large concourse of people was expected, the Military must be embuded from perceipeting in the service of that day. The determined manner and attitude of the speaker fully convinced his hearers that there was to be no soul-awing of soldiers in that quarter, and the gallant old "Innishillings," that never flinched from an enemy, were obliged to "best a retreat" from the formidable old new-keeper, with magic wand in hand. The Communding Officer marched the regiment back to burracks, (except the Roman Catholics, who were admitted to their house of worship,) without bearing any kind of Divine Service during the day. Whil things considered, this place of Church discipline demands an immediate inquiry, and it is to be hoped that the proper Authorities will fully investigate the matter.

A few days ago three respectable privates of the regiment were falsely accused of stealing a watch from the landlord of a public-house in Brighton. The complainant's accusation was built on very slender grounds. It appeared that he lost his watch during some part of the day in question, but could not state how or when; and because the three soldiers were in the house and drank a quart of ale (the time occupied in doing which not being more than five minutes), as a matter of course the Military must be the thleves; but fortunately the men's characters atood good in the regment, and every incitity having been afforded for a search and investigation, the poor fellows came off with "flying colours."

The regiment is practising the field movements five days in the week, in anticipation of the forthcoming inspection.

The hand performs at Brunawick-square on Monday and Thursday, and at the Cham-pier on Tuesday and Friday; the men are well accommodated with respectable conveyances to and from the places where they

Part Beaufort .- On the 1st inst. the 7th Drag. Guards was impacted by his Honour Col. Hare, in the presence of a great number of distinguished Officers, it being the first inspection which has taken place since the regiment has become effectively mounted on the Cape horses. It oppossioned some degree of excitement, not only amongst the Military but the Civillans. At eight o'clock the the Military but the Civilians. At eight o'clock the regiment was paraded, and proceeded to the Flats on the border of Katrland, where his Honour shortly afterwards arrived, the splendid band of the regiment playing "God Save the Queen,"—and the general salate being given, the Military evolutions were then proceeded with, and nothing could possibly exceed the correctness of the movements of the troops—their appearance was really heautiful, and the duarge made by the recomment full validation was one of the most magnificent wights troops at full gallop was one of the most magnificent sights ever behald; indeed, his Honour expressed himself in addressing the regiment is similar terms, that he had never witnessed such discipline in his life before, and fally when he considered the chart time they had in mounting the regiment, and the great degree of steadingle exhibited in the management of the horses. A numerous sortige was on the Plate, and at the conclusion of the inspection seemed highly gratified. It is very generally reported that a troop of the 7th Drag. Guards will be removed to Fort Peddie as soon as certain arrangements can be completed .-- Cape Times, May 9.

Every one is looking anxiously for Sir Peregrine Maitland on the Frontier. One thing it is to be hoped he will remedy—the constant marching and remarching, which is dreadful. There has been a greaf deal of sickness among the 7th at Beaufort. The hot winds there have been dreadful. The 27th have hopes of going home when the 2d Batt, of the 45th arrive. It would appear that the result has been most satisfactory, only one casualty having occurred smonget those brave fellows on the voyage. It is gratifying to learn, too, the very great kindness and attention that were evinced towards the wounded by the Authorities in India, in proof of which we need only mention, that the Governor-General himself . visited and comforted them in the field of battle, and repeatedly in their respective heapitals, and subsequently, when at in their respective heapitam, manuscriptum, vancous Calcutta, he personally apperintended the arrangements that were being made for their embarkation.

THE COMPANY'S NATIVE TROOPS.

BY CAPTAIN DOVETON.

In the year 1824 the last material change took place in the organisation of the Army, and a very advantageous one it was. Every battalion of Native Infantry was made a regiment, and the Officers attached to the different battalions were allotted accordingly. Each corps of Cavalry and Infantry were then Officered as they are now. which is as follows:—1 Colonel, 1 Lieut.-Colonel, 1 Major, 5 Captains, 10 Lieutenants, and 5 Ensigns, including in the number an Adjutant, and a Quarter-master and Interpreter. The Cavalry had, in fact, undergone no change in this respect. The distribution of the Native Army of India is in the following proportions:— The Bengal Army is squal in strength to the united Armics of Madras and Bombay; the Madras Army being Arphes of Margas and Bomboy, the Marka Arphosis, twice the strongth of that of Bomboy. This is the silot-ment of each Presidency, viz. in Bengal, 74 regiments of Native Infantry, 30 of Light Cavalry, 2 battalions of Native Foot, and 1 Brigade of Native Horse Artillery. At Madras, 52 regiments of Native Infantry, 8 of Light Cavalry, 1 battalion of Native Foot, and 2 troops of Native Foot, and 2 troops of Native Foot, and 2 troops of the foot of Native Foot, and 2 troops of the foot Cavalry, 1 battalion of Native Foot, and 2 troops of Native Horse Artillery. At Bombay there are 25 regiments of Native Infautry, 3 of Light Cavalry, 1 battalion of Native Foot, and 2 troops of Native Horse Artillery; the whole amount being 152 regiments of Infantry, 21 of Cavalry, 4 battalions of Feet, and 7 troops of Native Horse Artillery. To this large Native force are to be added many corps of Cavalry and Infantry, denominated local and irregular corps mostly assisted to the Bengal Presidency, besides invalid battalious, Sappars and Miners, &c., making in round numbers a disciplined and staunch Native Army of adsrealy less than 200,000 men to to this add 25,000 Queen's and 15,000 Company's Presidency, besides invalid battalions, Sappare and Miners, &c., making in round numbers a disciplined and staunch Native Army of nearesty less than 205,600 men; to this add 25,000 Queen's and 15,000 Company's European troops, and there is an Angio-India Army of India the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterestic step in Shart-hair the case at the matterest of Shart-hair the case at the matterest of the Shart-hair the case at the matterest of the Shart-hair the step in Shart-hair the step in Shart-hair the step in Shart-hair the step in Shart-hair the step in the step in Shart-hair the step in Shart-ha speak confidently. The Sepaya of Bougal and Sombay are by far the malt part Hindres of high casts, whilst the Madras Army contains a way and high casts, whilst the Madras Army contains a that number of Musulmans, especially in the Cavalry, for which arm they are pour-liarly suited. The Hindoor of the Madras Army are, ins a test or listly seited. The Hinton of the Madras Army are, however, not of the same high easts as their brethren in Bengal, and this is the mein eaune of their elective to embark for any foreign service. The acrepulous Bengales has almost insuperable obstales to encounter on shipboard, so fraught with religious observances is the process of cooking his feed, which is such a situation cannot be strictly complied with. Our Madras Sepoys, in the contrary, most fortunately for the Government they serve, are much less mice in such matters, for though, from the terms of their enlistment, they are not bound to proceed on ferrign service by see, they seldem full to volunteer as one man when called upon for such duties! However defective, therefore, the coast Sepoy duties! However defective, therefore, the coast Sepoy may be as to his physical capabilities, compared to his brethren of the other Presidencies, his seal and enterpricing spirit ere indisputable. A striking instance of presing spirit are indisputable. A straing instance with Ava, which places him beyond all praise. Of 25,000 Native soldiers that embarked from the Coromandel coast for that arduous and novel service, it is said that not one man held back when the different corps were called upon for volunteers! Thus, "Rouly, sys ready." may truly be said to be the motio of the Madras Sepoy. Apart, how-ever, from his unwillingness to embark for foreign expeover, from me unwittingness to smoark for foreign appe-ditions, which originates in religious prejudiess, the Bengal Sapoy is, physically speaking, decidedly superior to those of the sister Presidencies, being tall and well-formed in an eminent degree, whilst he is certainly second to none in gallantry on the battle-field.

It is a singular fast, but nevertheles . u one well known to many, and which it is certainly not easy to explain, that one of the most daring bodies of Native soldiers the Company ever had in their service were the old "Madran Ploneer" battalions, composed almost exclusively of men of the lowest easts. These were as common and meanof the lowest casts. These were as common and mean-looking min as could well be imagined, and were perhaps as partial to arrack as their European comrades, but theirs was ever the post of danger, and they were usually most conspicuous for their good conduct, more especially during the Burmene war, as many an old campaigner can testify. In sterming the stockades their duty was always to precede the attacking columns with the scaling-ladders, which they seldom failed to plant, though they suffered severely. How it was the Pariah should have been so severely. How it was the Parish should have been so calebrated for his Military prowess to a riddle I issue

The attachment that so commonly prevails between the Sepoy and his European Officer, and which of course should be fostered in every way, leads the latter perseionally to be fostered in every way, leads the latter permetentially to form too high an estimate of his men's physical courage, by considering them in this respect as quite equal to the European-an overweening opinion which I have known in two or three instances, on service, followed by the most fatil results. Here are two examples:—Upon the attack on the stockades at Keikloo, in Ava, the Madras Light Brigade, were defeated with heavy loss, their Commander having declined the assistance of a few Europeans. Again, at the same sense country, a decimen the assistance of a rew hardpeans. Again, at the first assist upon Sitting in the same country, a Native corps of considerable distinction was also signally defeated, their gallant and confiding Colonel having de-clined a similar offer, though strongly arged to accept it; upon this assiston he himself fall a victim to his own imupon this speason he himself fall a victic to his own imprudence. The courage of the Sepoy may be soundered, perhaps, to be more of a passive than an active nature, and consequently better adapted for the defence of a place than an attack upon one. The patient endurance of the Hinden is introduced in an active transfer of the Hinden is introduced in the second control of the Hinden is introduced in the second control of the Hinden is introduced in the second control of the second Hindes is preverbial, and in war this quality is frequently displayed to advantage; for when occasion requires it, he will stand under a heavy fire with astenishing firmness, and no less is the devotion he displays daving the dangers and hardships of a sings. Here I conscieve the Hindes Soppy is peopliarly in his element; as instance, in modern times, this obstinate defence of Corygenes in 1817, by the 2d Hembly Native Infantry, aided by a detachment of Madras Artillery; the defence of Kimmindine in 1824, by the 26th Madras Native Infantry, and a detachment of the Mining Native Infantry at Kahun, under Capt. Brown, in 1841, and last, though not lesst, the sodaring bravery of Colonel Montantles has corps, the 26th Leeght Native Infantry, which formed in hispertant part of the "Materietes Gerrison" of Jellulabal to 1842.

heach, though they in their turn were afterwards driven back. It was a gallant deed, but such cases are more enceptions to the general rule; and it is neither politic ner in good date to be accessarly reverting to them. The Sensy under the guidence of his European Officer is indeputably a good soldier, and examples there are of his having successfully encountered the French hand to hand. having an In one of the bloody conflicts between the French and English is 1763, before Coddalore, Ormo tells us that the Seth Bengal Native Infantry, under a Captain Williamson, Rigins in 1783, serore Cuddalore, Ormo tell in that the Seth Bongal Native Infantry, under a Captain Williamson, who was wounded, funght nobly, and encountelly steed a hapaset contest with the Franch regiment of Aquitains. a Marshelef the empire, under Napoleou, and subangumity King of Sweden.

Besides the Native Officera, two of which, a Subadar and a Jemedar, are attached to every company, there are the Havildare or Native Serjeanth, and Nagues or Corperate. The pay of the latter, as well as of the Sepoys, is not much more than half that of the carresponding European grade. A Subadar Major is the highest grade to which the Native Officer dan attain, and there is one to every corpe; he is generally a heavy veteran, of some forty years' service; but his pay is deemed very inselegate, and his superior rank avails him nothing in respect to command. Some have recommended the abolition of the grade of Native Officers, upon the plea of their being a powerless, and, consequently, useless burden the grade of Native Officers, upon the pies of their being a powerless, and, consequently, useless burden to the state; but sucmalous as their position may seem, they are now generally admitted to form a sale and necessary link between the Sepoy and his European Officer. Of late years it has been customary to appoint a distinguished Native Officer as disto-th-Comp to the Governore and Commanders-in-Chief of the different Presidencies as quitable compliment, which is justly appreciated by a suitable compliment, which is justly appreciated by this branch of the Army.

The Native soldier, on and off duty, is a very different being in appearmen. It is only on duty that he is com-palled to undergo the restraint of his uniform; and a grievous restraint is must be, to throw aside his own graceful costume—a loose pair of thin punjamen, and a light nualin vest—to swelter for hours beneath the folds of course English broadcloth, strapped close to his per-son by wide leather belts. Off duty, he is fully at liberty to dress as he pleases, when he forthwith resumes his proper habiliments; but his upright and martial air, the effect of a long course of drilling, renders the Sepoy easily distinguishable smidst the motion crowds of the Besser. The Native troops de not occupy burracks like Euro soldiers, as such a premiscuous mede of life is techliy unsulted to their habits, and would, moreover, interfere as-Sepay-barracks in India, are merely Places of Arms, and of which there is on every parada ground. They are built uniformly, being a specious hall, surrounded with a built uniformly, being a spevarandah, and are merely receptacies for the arms and accountrements of the men, and places of rendernous. Every military cantonment in India is arranged for a certain number of Native corps; and in the rear of, and generally parallel with the Place of Arms, are a vest number of small huts, built in lines, and these are occupied by ber of small huts, built in lines, and these are occupied by the Bepoys and their families—for they have all families, march I for it is not only his wife and children that occompany the Sepoy is his wanderings, but often, in addition thereto, he has to support a father and mather, a brother and sister. Such is the custom of the country.

Risch has of into years been done to improve the condition of the Native Army, and such improvement must be progressive; for it is, package, the most important of all points in the administration of the government of British India. As giving a general view of the past and present state of our Failive troops, it is hoped fills chetch may not be considered whilly unaccognishes.

my remarks to the former corps. The Court of Directors profess to fgive an Artillely appointment to Cadets at their Military College, as a reward of merit; and the appointment some years ago was unquestionably better than an Infantry Cadetship, was unquestionably better than an Infantry Cadetship, or perhaps even than a Cavalry one; that it is the very reveres now may be proved by the feet, that many Cadets, after being appointed to the Artillery, have charged into the Infantry; that all would do so were they to know the wretched prospects before them I have little doubt; but it takes a long time to wear away old impressions, and the idea that the Artillery in India is at least better than the Infantry, still generally prevails. Ferhaps the following may undeceive a few.

The Madrae Artillery has 28 Brevet Captains in it already, and every year their number increases. Many of the Subulterns were four and five years supernumerary 2d Liouvenants, and eight and ten years on the whole of the Sucatterns were rout and are years appendimensity 3d Liceutenants, and eight and ten years on the whole getting their lut Liceutenancy.

On the last promotion to Coptain, the Senior Liceutenant had been 19 years in the Army. Instances of very slow promotion undoubtedly do occur in the other branches of the Sarvice; but with the exception of the Regineers, they are not general, as they must now be in the Madeas Artillery for years to come; the juntor Subalterns of the corps in all probability will be worse off even than their predecessors. Take for instance the 35th Brevet-Captain; he has of course, been 15 years in the Army; and, to be as fortunate as the Officer last pro-meter to his company, he must get through 25 steps in four years, which is beyond all miculation.

So much for the premotion in the regiment; and be it

So much for the premotion in the regiment; and be it borne in mind that promotion, particularly to the rank of Captain, is everything in the Indian Army. An Officer them, for the first time, has audidant to enable him to live little a gentleman, and be free from debt. Should be be sick, and obliged to go home, his pay is sufficient, with strict economy, to keep him from difficulties, which is not the case with a Substant, who easy receives $\frac{1}{2}$ to gen anoma, and aven out of that pittiene there are stoppinges of some kind or another mide.

An most of the Indian Officers have no private means per anness, and even out of that pittienes there are stop-pages of seese kind or another mide;

As most of the Indian Officers have no private means to look to for support, the prometten which sowers the chara advantages must be of the first importance. The juster Officers of the Madres distillery, therefore, may almost consider this rank as virtually closed against them; those that survive hereafter will have passed their time of satisfied in the country as Bubalterns; they can never hope to participate in any honours given to the Army, no meatter how markerjone their configur may have been; their want of rank is agained them, and they have, healder. matter how maritoriese their similant may have been; their want of mak is against them, and they have, besides, the mortification of finding themselves duly superseded by the rest of the Herrice.

By this rest of the flervice.

Let us now see what advantage us Artillery Officer has in against af pay. I don't healths in against the in the junior gradus the Artillery is to week paid corpe of the Artillery. Compare the Horse Artillery with the Cavalry, and the Foot Artillery with the listentry in that respect, and you will find the belongs is against the Artillery.

Many of the treeps of a Cavalry Regiment are commanded by Lieutenesses, who thus vector the petty content allowance—I believe it in called—which makes a handrome addition to their pay. The treeps of House Artillery are Sivatlably commanded by Captains; the

In the Infantry, libewise, most of the Lieutepents command enequation, for which they receive an entre allowance; in the Foot Artillary few in comperison have such

I am willing to admit that the Artillery have their full share of Staff appointments, but they are nearly all excited from the limbeltures.

With all those drawbooks it can scarpely be wondered

With all those drawbooks it can scarcely be wondered at that Artillery Casieta frequently change into the Infantry; the only wonder is that the Court of Directors should still give the former appeintment as a reward of merit to those unlinkly Cadete who may have behaved themsolves will, and studied hard instead of cling their time at Addisounds. One would suppose these lails would have earned a claim to their kieneurable Manten' favour, and have been really supercled, instead of appointed to a firrice in which they have no eartily prospect of rising, and in which there is not one redemaing huncit.

It would seem to argue that the Directors themselves It would sent to argue that the Directors themselves can sourcely be aware, to the full antent, of the facts move detailed. Should this he the case, Bir, the sconer they are informed of them the better; and I treat that this letter may find a place in your columns—the subject of it, at least, is worthy of your support.

In addition to the many drawbacks already, the corputation had no contend against the (I am norry to say) into the land neglect to its inservoir of Coveriment; the purt of Directors a few years ago issued an Order that of pay and allowaness of the Indian Army were to be vaiminated. In the Bengal Arcillery 60 rupees a month in twen for the command of a company of Europeans, and say for Natives; the Madres Government very gardly sighbrised; the same allowanes so that Artillery, which had hitherto received much lass. The Circulus, however, thinking, I assued an auth mether suits superficious.

ever, thinking, I suppose, such justice quite superfision, put their veto upon it immediately, and this too it the lack of their own Order, that the psy and allowances of the Congal A'my were to be the standard.

Again, in Bangul, an Officer commanding a Field Again, in Bangui, an Omeer communing a risia. Bettery receives a gold molur every mently for every gun under his sommend, no such silowance has ever existed in the Madrie Artillery; nor was it equivatempted to be given to them, although by the Order just mentioned they were as clearly entitled to it as their more fortunate brothes in the Bengal Artillery.

In 1841 an augmentation of Officers was allowed to the Medree Army: the Infentry got theirs, I think, in June, the Artillery not till the August following; thus without any rhyme or reason the Officers of the latter who were promoted by it were quietly augusteded by the former.—I am, her.

BARRACK DAMAGNA.

To the Beller of the Naval and Military Ganzite.

Sin,-The Service at large is much indebted to you for the able Article you gave, in your Paper of the 6th inst., respecting " The Shameful Abuse to which Barrack Damages are serried;" and I fully agree with you in thinking, that the only plan for the Ordinance Department to pursue, in order to find out the best made for its future guidance in assessing and collecting these obsoxious damages, would be to call upon each Commanding Officer of a regiment for his opinion thereon, and thus, from practical official information, issue a more just and proper regulation than at present exists.

I well remember a very good anecdote you gave some time ago, in the Nevel and Military Guzette, respecting a door which an Officer had to pay for in the barracks at D--; but which door, it afterwards appeared, was only repoined by putting some putty into the holes, and painting it over, (although the Officer paid for a new one); and the same Officer being again quartered in the same barrack some peers afterwards, and in the same room, he tought the isombiell old door in its old place?

This he thought rather "tan good," and magazind it to This he thought rather "too good," and reported it to his Commanding Officer; an investigation took place, the result of which was the dismissal of the Barrackmaster. Now, I happened, a short time since, to be quartered in the same barrock, and, on making an impairy nto this matter, I found that every word you stated was strictly true. This speaks volumes as to who is the person who benefits by such changing charges. No doubt, the surrhuses essentially do so that if a Changitan the worksom nominally do so; but if a Committee of the Herne of Commons were arriered to investigate such charges, and put the soid worksom om their catte as to the insents they actually and both play received, I think avery pretty system of fraud would often be found out-not only as to berrack damages, but as to costs and condies, &c. . Nor THE U. B. condise, &c.

Naval & Military Gazette.

8ATURDAY, JULY 27, 1844.

CAPTAIN WARNER'S experiment of Brighton on Saturday last has re-awakened public curiosity with respect to his alleged discoveries, and will form the staple consmodity of conversation in Naval and Military circles for some time to come. When the subject was first broached in the columns of the " Times," about four years ago, we confess we were altogether sceptical as to the fact of Captain Warner's possession of the wonderful powers attributed to him. But the information which we subsequently received from parties who we knew would not wilfully deceive us, and whose opportunities of observation we thought had qualified them to form a judgment in the matter, diminished, if it did not altogether remove, our scepticism. At all events, we refrained from following the example of some of our contemporaries, who treated Capt. Warner's pretensions with absolute ridicule, for we discussed the subject in a grave, deliberative spirit. We recommend certain laughing Legislators to imitate our example in their treatment of this affair, when it comes under their notice on Tuesday night, upon Lord Ingestre's motion.

Every accomplished chemist knows many combinations of far greater explosive force than gunpowder, though their control has not hitherto been attained, unless Capt. Warner has hit upon some plan of managing these intractable dangerous substances. One thing is quite manifest to our minds, that gunpowder had nothing to do with the experiment of Saturday. Not one of the phenomens consequent on an explosion of gunpowder was visible on this occasion. Another fact was also clear to Naval eyes, that the ship was struck by an external force, and not by one from the interior of her fabric. In reply to the succes of Commodore Napier in the House of Commons, Lord Ingestre declared he was ready to depose upon oath to the perfect fairness of the experiment, and read in the House a certificate to that effect eigned by himand R.N. What is there, then, repugnant to belief, that an individual not so polite and deferential as a General Officer may desire, nor so regularly educated as an academy professor, should have stumbled upon, almost as it were by accident, a method of controlling powers which have been long known to exist in an unmanageable state?

We mean by the above remarks no disrespect to Captain Warner, who is personally unknown to us, and who may not deserve the description given of him in the House of Commons, by parties whom he seems to have offended; we only wish to show how unphilosophical and regardless of technological facts are those who argue upon the impossibility of Captain Warner's possessing any secret worth knowing, from the improbability of such being the case. The subject must now be thoroughly sifted, and we hope the small obstacles of official etiquette will not be interposed, as we fear they hitherto have been, in the course of inquiry. When Capt, Warner is detected to be an impostor, let him be truste as such a character deserves, but he has a right to fair play; and what he has already done fairly entitles him to candour. Many Officers went down to Brighton, exnecting to see a ship destroyed from a distance of five miles, and not seeing this spectacle they returned disappointed, and disparaged Captain Warner's powers. But they had only themselves to thank for these highwrought expectations. Captain Warner announced publicly in the newspapers, and privately to his friends. that the proposition he intended to illustrate off Brighton was, that no ship could chase a vessel furnished with his implements of warfare, without being herself destroyed. He said nothing on this occasion as to projectile forces, or how be should destroy the pursuing ship, and he very cle. verly managed to conceal his mode of operation, and mystified all the enectators. The conjectures we have read and heard upon the subject are, we apprehend, not a bit more useful, and not nearly so amusing as those given hy our facetious contemporary, " Punch," in an imaginary letter from Lord Brougham, who was really present at the experiment :-

"The ship sank true enough; but, my dear Pench.
I'll just tell you how the thing was done. It was either done by a rone, or else by something that floated up to the ship which pulled a trigger—that would be easy enough, of course—or an electric battery, or an air-gan, or a quantity of guitproffer made to all by Kyan's pre-something or other. At all events it's a mere trick, and being a trick, any body could do it! I could, at events, if the proper materials were supplied to me !?

The above is a capital morsel of fun, but not more farcical than many of the hap-hazard guesses we have

In taking what we believe to be a dispessionate view of the present proceedings of France with reference to Morocco, and in exhibiting less jealousy than some of our contemporaries of the policy and note of the French Government in its relation with that state, we do not fear the imputation of indifference to our national interests, or of a willingness to make any concessions which might be derogatory to the high station which this country holds in the scale of nations. We are, however, no terrorists; we have no apprehensions from the growing power and vaulting ambition of our Gallio neighbours. Some allowances should be made for their characteristic impetuouity, their vivacity and vain-gloriousness. Let us disregard the mischievous attempts of these who would sow the seeds of discord by exeggeration and misrepresentation, and rather let us rely with some confidence upon the pacific dispositions of the present ruler of the French, and the moderation and good sense of the Minister.

An idea is started and sedulously propagated, that the hostlie attitude assumed by France towards Morocco. affords valid grounds of complaint and just cause for apprehension. Let us dispessionately consider the facts. which have been too recently before the public to need recapitulation here, and ask ourselves whether Prance have not fair occasion for remonstrance, if not for more stringent measures against the Sovereign of that state? Whether England or any other nation would not, under similar circumstances, have required similar reparation?

France, we contend, has not exceeded the bounds of moderation or justice in the demands she has made. These demands were thus defined by the Minister :-

"That Abd-el-Kadir shall not reside in Morocco, on the frontiar of Algeria, with power to rekindle war at any moment in our dominions. This we have a right to demand, and we positively and categorically claim it. bodies of troops formed on our frontiers must be dispersed. The agents who, in violation of the law of sations, attacked us, must be recalled and punished. Abdel-Kadir (should a Mussulman Sovereign consider himself bound to give him an asylum), must be removed to the interior, or to a place in which he will be compelled to reside. Let these guarantees be properly secured to me reside. Let these guarantees be properly secured to us, and we will rest satisfied."

Monsieur Guizot further adds, to calm the appreheusions of neighbouring states :—

and conquest. We have no desire for territorial aggrandisement or of conquering Morocco; the territory of Algeria is pufficient for the ambition of France."

What is there exorbitant or objectionable in these demands? and if unobjectionable, it is pustile and unmonable to regard the enforcement of the conditions as being fraught with danger to ourselves. To call for a large increase to our Naval force, corresponding to the necessary demonstration made by France in that quarter, is but one of those hasty and Ill-considered schemes of opposition taction which, when yielded to, are productive of no other results than a useless expenditure of the public money.

Much has been written about the injustice of the original French listedien of the African territory, and the system of warfers which has been pursued there. Touching the first, it is now futile to meet the point; and with regard to the list; we believe we are sourcely in condition to cest the first stone. What colonising nation is not obnexious to concuse on this score? It is difficult to wage war with a smallmatharous foe, and not lay ourselves open to animedversion. In all such contests there is always a natural sympathy awakened amongst bilestanders in favour of the Walkise now virtually acknowledged the French colony of Algoria, and indeed our granting or withholding such recognition wer a matter of little concern to the French. It would never have been convenient or worth our while enough, of course—or an electric bettery, or an sir-gen, or a quantity of guideoutler made to set by Kyan's pro-cess from the bottom of the sen, or a submarine shell, or with our interests, or be consensant with our indications.

Viewing the locality of the French colony of Algeris, ie advantages of its position to France would seem to be greater than any corresponding evil which can immediately result to England from its present occupation. The inevitable tendency of France is to territorial aggrandisement, and no site could be more eligible for a French colony than the Barbary coast, open as it is to a ready communication with the parent country. France, favoured by Nature, already had her ports in the Mediterranean, of which the British Navy were able to give a good account during the late war, and we do not see that our position is materially deteriorated by the circumstance of some ports on the Barbary coast, being now in the hands of the French.

The Courier François says-" England is afraid of France, Spain, and Italy, becoming mesters of the Mediterranean trade, by occupying the African coast of that sea." Unless we are mistaken, the Mediterranean trade, strickly speaking-by which we mean the mere carrying traffic between the circumscribing shores of the Medi terranean-has long been carried on under Spanish and Sardinian colours, and by the petty navies of a few Italian ports. That Great Britain's commercial interests or prosperity would be sensibly affected by a Spanish or French occupation of the African coast is a visionary nesumption, and it would be equally idle to suppose that holding Gibraltar and Malta, and possessed of the enormous Naval resources which this country may beast of, our command of the Maditerraneen sea would be to the alightest extent impaired, or that our maritime supremany, either in that quarter or any other, could thereby be in any degree was

Now, in this case, we will say nothing of the bad ex ample she to the men, the will we dwell upon the unpopularity and dislike that would be the portion of any Captain who should attempt to do his own duty strictly, or to make the Subalterns do theirs; we will only ask what kind of school is this in which to train young Officers? What notion of their duties on guard can young men have who have seen at their head-quarters the duty performed in this slovenly menner? It is easy to senten to he conhicred and then reprimend the young man who, at Deptford, absented himself from his guard; but to be just, we should also punish the superior Authorities of that garrison, who, five years back, permitted a system which educated young men in the constant habit of breaking through the established rules and regulations of the Service, and taught them that such conduct was justifiable, and consistent with their character as Officers.

Wm cannot but regret that no measures have been taken this Session of Parliament to place the Militia of our Maritime counties at least in an effective state. The mere bandful [of regular Troops in the Waited Kingdom is utterly insufficient for more than preserving the peace of the country, in the event of riots or outbreaks of our own population. In this reduced state of the Army, we must look to the Militia in any sudden emergency for Troops to resist a foe from without; and the nation is little careful of its safety, its wealth, and its honour, if, in these times of steam, it does not provide for the defence of its towns along the sen, and its countles bordering on it. The Militin might at least be belieted and enrolled, and thus far in a state of preparation for being armed and trained. The importance of an early arrangement for the defence of our Coasts causes us to revert this week to the neglected state of our whole Militia force, if force that may be called that does not yet exist. The day may be much nearer than many suppose, when steam will render an Army as measurey for the defence of Old England, as, in past times, the Mary was held to be. Indeed. the "Wooden Walls of Old England" are no longer the walls of defence they were; and we must on shore prove to our enemies that the Sexon and Norman blood has not ceased to flow in our veine; that the exrong arm and burly frame are to be found in our Militia and Yeomanny; and that, though a niggard economy deprives the nation of a regular Army, the men of England, as a Afflicia, can defend their homes, even without the accurate erganization of the Regiments of the Line.

Tun arrival of four reciments in India, abo Market of the present year, will pleas a neble reinforcin nearly four thousand European soldiers at the c of the Governor-General, should the uffairs of the have taken then that turn they must inevitably as danger to our own frontier, and to the States will protestion in the violaity of the Saikh territories. this fine body of men not be required for any land service, they will cause the return home of four rutes Second, Third, Thirtmenth, and Fortleth, all uted have done good service to the State, and added former fame the learnin of Indian warfardial at 1 ever, lamentable to redect how few, if any, of  $t_{\rm c}^{\rm STH_s}$ embarked with the Colours of those four fine """ ments, will now land with those Colours once their native shores. Shall this system for ever continue, of transporting ou soldiers, like felone, to a tropical climete for the whole course of their lives? No soldier's life is worth twenty years' purchase in any climate. Let us adjure the Military Authorities to interfere, and cause the relief of regiments from India to be made in as short a period after ten years' service as practicable—and in all cases under aftern

Two Army at home, Officers and privates alike, are looking with much anxiety to an early order this year for leaves and furloughs being greated. We would most respectfully suggest that the privates, at least, should be permitted, in a reduced proportion, to proceed on leave from the first of next month, and by extending the period of time during which furloughs may be granted, to leave more men present with their regiments in the winter season. Two years have nearly slapsed since the soldier has received the usual indulgence; and to these mass whose service in this country is so very bilet-many proceeding to India for more than twenty years-it is only fair to permit as liberal a grant of furlough as the off cionay of regiments at all times will allow. If fifty men in each corps were granted furloughs of one month, and thus on till March wext, all the men desirous of visiting their homes might do so, without seriously lessening the strength of the several regiments. This would also diminish the number of offences in the classes - Desertion and of Absence without Leave-now so very numerous.

Ir has been a matter for considerable surprise amon Naval mon, that the Dress Regulations of the Nav should for more than a year have remained in the present anomalous and unfinished state. It is quite in conggiveble that the Authorities intend to perpetuate a evil so glaring to all, and so degrading and atmoying t the Officers not included in the recent changes. Were stranger to enter the ward-room of one of Her Majesty ships, and to view the gray-headed Master, the Surgeon and the Paymester, with their awkward single-breaste coats, and their solitary spaulets, and the young Lieu tenants decorated in a manner, we confess, perfectl becoming, but strikingly at variance with their mean meter and equals, he would noty ully inquire the reaso for such distinctions; and be apprise would be gree when he is told that they acers are all of the sam rank, and that until v , recently no such distinction enlated. From time to time it has been our peet task to refer to certain measures tending chary to improve the condition of the Officers, and employment in the Coast-Guard Service more repor by Officers of the Royal Navy. The advantages, or otherwise, to result from this new plan, will remain to be tested; we have little doubt but that the infusion of fresh youth and vigour into this Service will be found highly beneficial; and we are not sorry to find the rule deviated from in this instance, as a beginning.

We have no means of judging what may be the issue of the investigation made by the Committee of the House of Commons, during the present session, into the state of the Tobacco Trade, but we apprehend that nothing has been illicited which will induce the Government to consent to a reduction of the present rate of duty; and, indeed, if such were to be the case, we do not suppose that it would lead to any alteration in the present extent of force comprised in the Const-Guard Establishment, so long as the high duty on Brandy is retained. We shall therefore hope to see this highly efficient and extremely valuable Service maintained for many years to come, in full force. We should observe, with regret, any alteration which would have the effect of withdrawing this maritime police from our coasts, or crippling its power of rendering aid and protection to the shipwreeked.

In the debate in the House of Commons on Tuesday night, on the affairs of Morocco and Franceputatements were made by the Opposition Members relative to the Navy, which were met by counter-statements on Government side, the Secretary of the Admiralty winding up by contending that in the lace of the metivity of our dockyards, the building of new and-efficient ve so forth, as well as the attention bestewed on the steam Marine, it was wholly unfounded to affirm that the present Government were neglecting the efficiency of

The opinions of the Mover, of the Minister, and of Sir George Cockburn, deserve attention. Mr. Sheil commenced by referring to the opinions of the Duke of Wellington and Sir R. Peel, with regard to the inexpediency of baving England destitute of that force on which actionly be arranged, but her existence depends. In August, 1838, the Duke declared that "his great object in speaking at all was to impress upon their Lordships and upon the Government; and upon the country, the absolute necessity of having a fitting Navil force in all parts of the world." Our Ravel force in 1838, which the Duke countinged insufficient consistent of himself-the Duke considered insufficient, consisted of shipe-of-theline, 18; frigates, 29; sloops, 39; brigs, 39; steamers, 22. On the 11th Murch, 1839, Sir Robert complained that Government had not sent a squadron to the coast of Mexico when St. Juan de Uloa was stracked by the French. Sir Robert reprocessed the Government with having omitted to assumble a great Naval force at the naving omitted to assumpte a great Navat torce at the point where events of signal magnitude were likely to arise; and instead that the While Government and purmitted the Naval power of England to declare, and said it down as a rule that we should have a large first randyal for immediate employment, and for the protection of our something or other: At all even being a trick, any body sould a events, if the proper materials is view of the discre-

Our force was necessarily more divised than that of any other country. But the Officers of the British Army, with sorrow is it spoken, have me sympathy in common, no philanthronic segrit de corps; they have not one corporate inattable missing among them for benevolent purposes!

But Sir, I trust there a strong kindred feeling amongs, the Officers of the British Army. I know it abounds with men of warmand generous hearts, ay, and thanks to the Giver of all goodness, with Officers in whose breasts there is the spect of Christian love, which need but be called into action to induce them to assist to the formation and support of fan ; catablishment which

The Nelson Piller in meeting of the Committee took place on Saturday, fat the National Gallery, Sir George Cookburn in the cheir, for the purpose of taking into consideration a communication which had been transmitted by the Government on the subject of the ap-plication made by the Committee, to the effect that the Government would either supply the means of completing the monument, or take it wholly into their own hands. There were present, besides the Chairman, the Marquis of Northampton, Lord Colborne, Lord Monteagle, Sir Peter Laurie, Mr. Sydney Herbert, one of the Lords of the Tressury, So. Sc. The official letter from the the Tressury, S.c. Sec. The official letter from the Tressury was read. It stated, that in 1816, the House of Commons having voted adequate sums for commemo-rating the great Military victories which were achieved, and might thenceforward be achieved by the arms of this country, there could be no doubt of the existence of a similar desire to perpetuate the memory of the Naval valour by which England was so eminently distinguished. It appeared, therefore, to the Government that the most advisable course which could be pursued by the Committee of the Nelson Pillar, was to deposit whatever sums of money might be in the possession of the treasurer to the fund in the hands of the Commissioners of Woods and Porests, who would undertake the task of completing the monument. The letter also alieded to the large sum of 20,000%, alreadyjunbeeribed by the public, and desired that all the drawings, plans, and documents, relative to the pillar, should be sent into the office of the Commissioners. The meeting unanimously agreed to the suggestions in the official letter, which was considered by the Committee as a security for the most perfect completion of the work. esed that upon one side (the wish was expre northern) of the pedestal, not only the name of Nelson, but the names of all the other eminent Officers engaged in the battle of Trafaigar should be chiselied .- We are glad to find that the Lords of the Treasury have at last announced their intention of recommending to Parliament a grant of money for the completion of the monument to the restast of Naval heroes. The first, "On the Character of the English People," occupies a third of the book, and claims deep considereccupies a tuird or the book, and trising deep consideration from all classes, as displaying a close examination of the evils inherent in society, and a sincere belief that the Church abuse can save the nation.—a Church restored, modified, and acting with moderation, seal, and atored, modified, and acting with moderation, seek and diligence in the disubarge, not only of Christian duties, but Church ordunances. ## AN EPISODE IN THE LIFE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

Bayenne, July 16.—The other day I took a wall along the embankments of the Adour, with a fine old Frenchman who had served throughout the Peninsular war, and now enjoys the offum oum digastate of three france per diem in Heyonne. As we slowly paged onwards, my companion pointed to a distant sandhill, covered with pine trees, and asked if the Duke de Vellington, as he pine trees, and asked it the Dake he veilington, as he called his Grace, was aware that thirty years ago he providentially escaped being killed or taken prisoner close to the spot we saw. I replied, "I did not know," and asked the views moustages his meaning, whereapon he related the incident, which two highly respectable gentle-

In January, 1814, the ailled Army, commanded by Lord Wellington, occupied the villages of Bidart, Biaritz, and Anglet, and a portion of the left bank of the Adournearly opposite and somewhat below the citadel of The Commander-in-Chief established his head-quarters at the hamlet of Saths, as its proximity to the river enabled him to observe him snemy's works on the opposite shore, from a pine grove upon a hillock called Blancpeguou. It seems his Lordship's movements were watched from the French man-of-war brig Mounte, for her commander Lieutenant Bourgeois wrote to the Chief Commissary of Marine at Bayonne, on the 22d of January, proposing to lay in ambush near the pine groto, with some of his crew, and surprise Lord Wellington they next time he visited Blanopeguon. Lieuteneant Bourgeois particularly requested the Commissaire to gain the consent of the Result Granual Thomsont to a contract of the Result Granual Thomsont to a contract of the Result. of the Franch General Thousenet to a coup de main, which, if successful, would deprive the allied Army of its right hand, as the writer expressed it.

The 22d and 23d passed without an answer being returned, and during this interval Lord Wellington and four General Officers and Alder-de-camp repaired as usual to the hillock, without any emort, and returned anmolvated to head quarters. There is little doubt if Linut, Bourgeels had carried him plans into execution on the 23d. Lord Wellington and his Staff would have been can have Thus a well-concerted enterprise, apparently on the eve of fruition, was rendered abortive by one of those strange nances which atmost make me believe is predestination. What events, what constroptes, would have resulted from Lord Wellington's capture! Speculation and forethought start back appalled from the vast and gloomy expanse of woe which the idea of such calamity discloses.
